PARTICIPATION IN GOVERNMENT

Parliamentary Democracy, the people choose their representatives to represent the people's interests and to make decisions. However, they do not choose the head of the government. The people elected to the legislature, then, choose the head of the government. The leader in a parliamentary democracy is usually titled as the Prime Minister. Canada is divided into sections, similar to the United States, called provinces or territories. Canada was once a former monarchy. It is important to understand that this is only through tradition. Citizens in Canada that are 18 and older are required to vote for members of Parliament. The elected officials of Parliament represent the citizens at a national level.
