Current Progress In Chadic Linguistics:

Current Progress in Chadic Linguistics Zygmunt Frajzyngier, 1989-01-01 The volume consists of papers prepared for the International Symposium of Chadic Linguistics Boulder Colorado May 1 2 1987 Although the papers are representative of the current work being done in the field of Chadic linguistics they also reflect the current and past interests and methodologies of general linguistics The papers included in the volume should therefore be of interest to a general linguist as much as to the Chadicist or a specialist in some other Afroasiatic branch The papers are grouped by the areas of linguistic fields and methodologies Papers on syntax are followed by papers on morphology phonology and methodology of historical reconstruction

Studies in Chadic Morphology and Syntax Zygmunt Frajzyngier, 2002 The present volume consists of fourteen comparative and descriptive studies dealing with the syntax and morphology of the simple clause in Chadic Chadic languages are the largest and the most diversified branch of the Afroasiatic family Among the issues discussed in the volume are the underlying forms of verbs in West Chadic nominal and verbal plurality ergative characteristics coding of grammatical relations in proto Chadic double coding of the subject also known as intransitive copy pronouns Also discussed are the use of verbal extensions in the coding of causative and benefactive the ventive and the centrifugal logophoric systems the interrogative clause and grammaticalization from preposition to copula The volume concludes with a discussion of the implications of Chadic for the theory and methodology of diachronic syntax The studies are of interest to scholars of Afroasiatic languages African languages typologists scholars interested in grammaticalization diachronic syntax and structures of grammatical systems

BOOK JACKET The Phonology of Proto-Central Chadic Richard Gravina, 2014 The Central Chadic languages are a diverse and fascinating collection of languages spoken in Nigeria Cameroon and Chad The phonologies of these languages have intrigued linguists since they were first studied due to their minimal sets of phonemic vowels sometimes only one complex systems of vowel harmony and extensive use of palatalized and labialized consonants Analysis of these languages led to the proposal of phonemic units referred to as prosodies which act on both vowels and consonants allowing Central Chadic phonologies to be described in a neat and succinct way

This study looks at the diverse phonological systems found within Central Chadic and reconstructs the phonological system of their ancestor language This system is itself simple and succinct and includes one phonemic prosody and just three phonemic vowels The study describes the phonological processes that led from this system to the many phonological systems that are in use today shedding light both on the history of the languages and on issues in the analysis of these languages

A Historical Phonology of Central Chadic H. Ekkehard Wolff, 2022-06-02 Of all of the African language families the Chadic languages belonging to the Afroasiatic macro family are highly internally diverse due to a long history and various scenarios of language contact This pioneering study explores the development of the sound systems of the Central Chadic languages a major branch of the Chadic family Drawing on and comparing field data from about 60 different Central Chadic languages H Ekkehard Wolff unpacks the specific phonological principles that underpin the Chadic languages diverse phonological evolution arguing that their diversity results to no little extent from historical processes of prosodification of reconstructable segments of the proto language The book offers meticulous historical analyses of some 60 words from Proto Central Chadic in up to 60 individual modern languages including both consonants and vowels Particular emphasis is on tracing the deep rooted origin and impact of palatalisation and labialisation prosodies within a phonological system that on its deepest level recognises only one vowel phoneme a

The Phonology of Two Central Chadic Languages Tony Smith,Richard Gravina,2010 The Phonology of Two Central Chadic Languages These two phonologies of the Chadic languages Muyang and Mbuko present typologically unusual data the bulk of which is found in the vowel systems Prosodies of labialization and palatalization can span entire words affecting both vowels and consonants Morphemes are of three types neutral labialized and palatalized At a deep level these languages have only one or two basic vowels all other vowel qualities result from the interplay of other factors The labialization and palatalization prosodies do not operate identically but may co occur in Muyang and possibly in Mbuko The consonantal and tonal systems also have points of interest Both Muyang and Mbuko have lateral fricatives implosive stops and prenasalized voiced stops Both have three tone levels but no contour tones or downstep Voiced obstruents and voiced fricatives in Muyang and Mbuko are tonal depressors These phonologies are written in a broadly generative rule based framework but theorists from various persuasions will find much of interest including Muyang labialization patterns related to adjacency and consonant prosody vowel interactions Mbuko tones and adjacency and a Muyang cor autosegment causative morpheme The works in this volume are the result of years of intensive contact with the speakers of Muyang and Mbuko by the authors
