Stanford,2006 Visit the author s website at www.triniwriter.com In Desires a collection of short stories by Vaughn T Stanford the writer holds up a mirror to our eyes and by some arcane osmotic process we become more than merely the observer we are the mirror itself and the reflection Writer teacher Stanford selects appropriately diverse strands of the society we are in the process of creating and paints them in all their multihued brilliance Realism is the key each story is startling cinema verit each character someone we know each exchange a conversation we have heard or participated in The protagonists face their challenges while learning changing despairing and triumphing and their stories are our stories Louise Bennett in her prologue to The Woman the Writer Caribbean Society observes that these societies can benefit from the words of the writers and artists who celebrate the richness of experience of our people thus renewing faith in self and engendering hope Stanford s characters are all too humanly fallible wrestling with their family lives forging their identities searching for truth dreaming their dreams spiraling into self destruction triumphing over the odds As Bennett observes the journey of the Caribbean people has not been nice or pretty and these stories are devoid of sentimentality which would be out of place amidst the stark realism presented One of the stories the short noir piece The Letter is steeped in the stygian despair of the protagonist who fails to find a way out of his private abyss In When Tears Are Not Enough and The Victim two women each find a way out of the maze of pain and degradation wreaked by violent domestic abuse in one case and childhood sexual assault in the other both triumphing despite the odds that are stacked against them A Question of Justice and Beyond Suspicion reflect the pandemic of violent crime that threatens the very existence of these Caribbean societies and examine the nature of justice the vigilante code the implications of the trade in illegal drugs and retribution in various forms Desires is the story of Everyteacher as he faces the students whose youth beauty and promise are constantly at war with the damage inflicted on them by their toxic convulsing society the violence rape rage despair and betrayal yet he manages to love them still and to find hope for the future In Two to Tangle the longest piece the themes of the other stories merge as we accompany Saleem on his odyssey from humble beginnings in a tiny wooden shack with a drunken abusive father mired in grinding poverty into early adulthood after a youth spent in striving to achieve the advantages which had been lacking in his childhood He faces the eternal dilemmas and discovers through trial and pain that life is not fair that faith is not blind and unquestioning that all men himself included have feet of clay and ultimately that healing and redemption may be achieved through love As Bennett concludes writers and artists play a vital role in creating and recreating for us images of our societies and of ourselves and in so doing participate in forging our future In Desires we find poignant echoes of the way we used to be reflections of who we are and visions of who we might become Louise Bennett Prologue Message The Woman The Writer Caribbean Society edited by Helen Pyne Timothy 1998 Center for Afro American Studies Publications University of California Los Angeles The references are from page xvii Commentary by Charmaine Rousseau Caribbean Poetry, Folktales, and Short Stories Ophelia A.
