Abstract

In the late of December 2019, a new coronavirus (COVID-19) caused by severe acute respiratory syndrome coronavirus 2 (SARS-CoV 2) emerged from the city of Wuhan, China and was subsequently declared a pandemic by the World Health Organization (WHO) on March 11, 2020 after it had spread to many countries across the globe. On February 28, 2020, the Sub-Saharan Africa (SSA) reported its first case in Nigeria, and it has since spread to all countries in SSA. Several public health and medical care measures were rolled out by many countries to stem the tide of the spread at the height of the pandemic, between February 28, 2020 and February 28, 2021, period covered by this study. This paper evaluates the levels of health system efficiency of the COVID-19 public health measures and medical care services and their determinants across Sub-Saharan African (SSA) countries using country-level data for those countries. The data was analyzed using bootstrap data envelopment analysis (DEA) and other advanced econometric analyses that produce robust estimations of the relationship between health systems efficiency and their determinants. The general finding of the study suggests that there is more room for health systems in SSA to improve their technical efficiency in fighting the COVID-19 pandemic. The most important determinants of health system efficiency in the fight against the spread of the virus were GDP per capita, population density, temperature levels, and quality of governance. Adequate health system preparedness and human resource strategies geared towards recruiting and/or retaining well-qualified and experienced healthcare workers to provide professional services would prove critical in containing pandemics of this nature.

1. Introduction

In the late of December 2019, a new coronavirus (COVID-19) caused by severe acute respiratory syndrome coronavirus 2 (SARS-CoV 2) emerged from the city of Wuhan, Hubei Province in the People's Republic of China (Arshad Ali et al., 2020), on December 29, 2019, when a cluster of pneumonia of unknown origin occurred (The 2019-nCoV Outbreak Joint Field Epidemiology Investigation Team, 2020). On February 28, 2020, the Sub-Saharan Africa (SSA) reported its first case in Nigeria (Adepoju, 2020), and it has since spread to all the 46 SSA countries. It was subsequently declared a pandemic by the World Health Organization (WHO) on March 11, 2020 after it had spread to many countries and regions across the globe (Mahase, 2020). Health System Strengthening in Sub-Saharan Africa (ASSET) on January 16, 2021 reported that more than 2.2 million people in Africa have been confirmed to be infected and more than 50,000 deaths recorded (ASSET, 2021). Many health systems in the SSA region are limited in their ability to respond robustly to this pandemic due to decades of under-investment in healthcare, relying heavily on out-of-pocket payment and donor support. Out of 46 countries in the SSA region 41 are classified as having weak health systems, languishing in the bottom 5th of countries worldwide ranked by Healthcare Access and Quality (Fullman et al., 2018).

Even though the younger age distribution and warmer temperature in the SSA region are factors recognized to
