

COMPOSTING
FOR COMMUNITARIAN
RECYCLING
IN COMMUNITY-BASED ORGANIZATIONS

As the world's population grows, the demand for food and other necessities increases. This demand is met by the agricultural sector, which is responsible for producing the food and other necessities that we need to survive. However, the agricultural sector is also responsible for producing a large amount of waste, which is often discarded in landfills or incinerated. This waste can be recycled and used as a resource for the agricultural sector, but this process is often inefficient and costly. Composting is a sustainable and cost-effective way to recycle organic waste and produce a valuable resource for the agricultural sector. This report explores the benefits of composting for community-based organizations and provides a guide to getting started with composting in your organization.
