

Cosmic-Ray Isotope Abundances Compared with Solar System

- Cosmic-ray source abundances have been obtained for 12 isotopes of the elements Fe, Co, Ni, and Ca using data from the ACE Cosmic-Ray Isotope Spectrometer (CRIS).
- In comparing the derived composition with that of primordial solar system material, it is found that although the abundances range over a factor of nearly 10^4 , the compositions of these two populations of matter are very similar, differing by less than a factor of 2 for each of these isotopes.
- A possible interpretation of these similarities is that the cosmic-rays were derived from interstellar matter, as was the solar system. If this is the case, then the composition comparison probes the extent of chemical evolution of interstellar matter between the time when the solar system formed ~ 4.6 Gyr ago and when the cosmic-rays were accelerated only ~ 15 Myr ago.
