

Food Additives Market Objectives of the Study Includes Research Methodology and Assumptions and Forecast by 2030

The Global Food Additives Market size was $45.7 billion in 2020, and is anticipated to grow to a value of more than $59 billion in 2030, with an increasing CAGR (compound annual growth rate) of over 5% from 2022 to 2030.

A food additive is a compound that gives food items better taste, colour, smell, and flavour. Food additives are employed to fulfil a specific functional requirement, such as improving stability and preservation. To meet the growing demand, particularly for processed foods, many novel food additives have lately been created. Natural food additives are made from natural raw resources including plants, animals, and minerals; however, there are also many different synthetic food additives on the market. For ages, people have preserved food and improved its flavour by adding natural food additives like salt and sugar. Stabilizers, emulsifiers, thickening agents, gelling agents, preservatives, and coating agents are all functions of food additives, both synthetic and natural. Natural food additives are utilised as flavouring components in both food and beverages.

Over the projection period, there may be an increase in demand for natural food additives due to the rising desire for products with ingredients that are good for your health. The need for food additives will be driven by the need to enhance the flavour, texture, mouthfeel, and overall appearance of foods and beverages. The primary force propelling the market is the expanding food and beverage sector internationally. The changing dietary habits of the population are driving an increase in packaged food and beverage consumption worldwide, which will also fuel an increase in the demand for the chemicals used in food processing to raise the nutritional value and quality of the final product.
