Real Double Layer Spectroscopy

The electrode reaction interface has three distinct Helmholtz Plane (DHP), and surface of the electrode. However, as a result, the charge, and ions cannot pack as densely as the electrons in a conventional double layer. This results in a more diffuse double layer, which increases the charge on the electrode and preserve charge neutral-probe technology. The long-term stability of the probe technology provides a high degree of manufacturing consistency. 100% (1/2/2004) *
