

BASIC BIRTH RIGHTS FACTSHEET

Birthrights factsheets give you information about your human rights when you are pregnant and giving birth.

This factsheet explains your basic rights in maternity care. We have other factsheets available in English on our website: www.birthrights.org.uk

1. You have the right to be treated with dignity and respect at all times.

Human rights law means that public organisations like hospitals must treat you with dignity and respect.

Healthcare professionals (doctors and midwives) should be polite and respectful to you.

They must support you to make decisions about your care.

They must not make assumptions about you or what care you need.

Your healthcare professionals must make sure that you have an interpreter if you need one so you can make decisions about your care.

You should have privacy when you need it, for example during labour or if you are breastfeeding, and should not be left feeling exposed or vulnerable.

If you have particular needs, for example, you only want to see female healthcare professionals, then this should be respected if possible. If this is not possible – for example, you want pain relief during labour and there are only male doctors available – then you should be given the information you need to decide what to do.

If you have a disability or long term health condition, your healthcare professionals should make sure you have equal access to care and are not disadvantaged. This might mean giving you different or extra care, or providing you with support that you need (for example, having access to a disabled toilet, having extra support after you've had your baby, or a plan be somewhere as quiet as possible if noise causes you distress).

2. You always have the right to say no.

When you are pregnant you have the right to make your own decisions about your body, just as you do at any other time.

Health professionals must ask if you agree to any medical treatment. For example, they must ask before examining you, before taking your blood pressure, and before giving you pain relief. This is the law.

It is against the law to give you medical treatment unless you agree to it.

It is always ok to say no. This is called declining consent.

If you do want treatment and say yes, this is called giving consent.

You can ask for more time to make your decision if you need it.

Even if you give consent, you can change your mind.
