Anywhere in the world space is the core of architecture and urban planning In China space was and perhaps still is clearly defined and distinct but at the same time boundless and seemingly empty In imperial China city planning and especially the design of the capital were highly symbolic and crucial for living in harmony with the universe A discussion The first part of the paper is concerned with explaining how space has been defined in Chinese urban planning and architecture from ancient times until today The second part of the paper is about the city its symbolism and the importance of Chinese cities in ancient years compared to today Chinese Architecture and Town Planning, 1500 B.C.-A.D. 1911 Andrew Boyd, 1962 Chinese Architecture, Urban Planning, and Landscape Design Kenneth Treister, 1987 Building A Revolution Charlie Q.L. Xue, 2005-09-01 Building a Revolution Chinese Architecture Since 1980 presents a picture of Chinese architecture in transition as the entire economy shifted from being planned and state controlled to being market led The book also examines the national form and Chinese identity the impact of international architecture housing reform and the emergence of architects in private practice Both celebrated and young Chinese architects are portrayed and the notable buildings in the prosperous coastal cities are highlighted Through this book on modern Chinese architecture the reader will appreciate the influence of globalization and modernization on the most populous country in the world Investigation on the influence of Chinese traditional elements in contemporary building design by Western architects in China Razak Basri, 2011-08-05

Doctoral Thesis Dissertation from the year 2010 in the subject Art Architecture History of Construction Atlantic International University course Doctorate in Architecture PhD language English abstract China is transforming in terms of economy social culture and physical development Due to this rapid urban development in China threatens the urban fabric of Chinese cities Development has attempted to balance strong Western influences with traditional Chinese forms and has met mixed results Although it is already in existence of a new current of Chinese regionalism in architecture but this trend could be further improved by careful applications of the principles of architecture This thesis presents five case studies of current Chinese completed building projects in two major urban settings Beijing and Shanghai designed by Western architects Each case study is examined in each of the basic elements of architecture in relation to traditions and modern architecture These case studies are then used as the foundation for specific recommendations for future development of contemporary Chinese architectural regionalism in particular focusing on ways to integrate traditional or vernacular techniques devices and forms with modern needs modern technologies and foreign influences in order to enhance the regional culture and built environment There is distinction made between Beijing and Shanghai in which Beijing is more of a historic city emphasizing Chinese government while Shanghai is more of an economic nerve of China emphasizing trade finance and international business Together the two cities form the forefront of the built environment showcase of China A History of Interior Design John F. Constructing a Place of Critical Architecture in China Guanghui Ding, 2016-03-09 For the past 30 years The Chinese journal Time Architecture Shidai Jianzhu has focused on publishing innovative and exploratory work by emerging architects based in private design firms who were committed to new material theoretical and pedagogical practices In doing so this book argues that the journal has engaged in the presentation and production of a particular form of critical architecture described as an intermediate criticality as a response to the particular constraints of the Chinese cultural and political context The journal's publications displayed a dual critique a resistant attitude to the dominant modes of commercial building practice characterised by rapid and large scale urban expansion and an alternative publishing practice focusing on emerging independent architectural practitioners through the active integration of theoretical debates architectural projects and criticisms This dual critique is illustrated through a careful review and analysis of the history and programme of the journal By showing how the work of emerging architects including Yung Ho Chang Wang Shu Liu Jiakun and Urbanus are situated within the context of the journal's special thematic editions on experimental architecture exhibition group design new urban space and professional system the book assesses the contribution the journal has made to the emergence of a critical architecture in China in the context of how it was articulated debated presented and perhaps even produced within the pages of the publication itself The protagonists of critical architecture have endeavoured to construct an alternative mode of form and space with strong aesthetic and socio political implications to the predominant production of architecture under the current Chinese socialist market economy To rebel against certain forms of domination and suppression by capital and power is by no means to completely reject them rather it is to use those

Parametric Design in Traditional Chinese Architecture Rensa Guo, 2020 The International style of modern architecture is called universal In today's global practice of architecture architecture studios around the world take part in global architecture competitions designing buildings that look similar to one region and transplanting them to a different continent These global designs lack response to the culture of diverse regions and its historical civilizations In China today there is resistance to change while the global exchange is happening While monolithic brutalistic towers replace indigenous villages in Beijing some Chinese architects attempt to rebuild old traditions of courtyard houses and hutong In southern China many traditional style Chinese buildings are designed and constructed In resistance the Chinese aesthetic is leaning towards traditional culture in the last ten years Looking through the history of Chinese architecture There are missing links between the old and the new architecture Before the 1900s there were no professional architects in China The only one permitted to design and build a building was the carpenter There are higher and lower level carpenters higher level carpenters design great traditional Chinese buildings like temples and palaces working for the government and the emperor Lower level carpenters design and build houses for civilians All carpenters follow the standards of Building Formulas learning from older carpenters In the 1900s Chinese architecture was influenced by the modernism of the western world There was no transition in between Chinese architecture jumped from traditional directly to modernism with no translation Since the 1990 s new style in Chinese architecture is called Chinese modernism It combines the space of modernism and the shape of traditional Chinese style together The traditional Chinese style is reduced to mere decoration but is not the core of its design This is much like the US post Modern Period of the 65 90 s Now more Chinese architects focus on the expression of the oriental philosophy in architecture The traditional Chinese style is no longer just decoration but united with a reflection of space and environment As Chinese architects return to not copying the past nor decorating with the style but addressing Chinese cultural relationships with space and the environment a new Chinese architecture of contemporary making technologies looks to define the new Chinese future
