

Nature vs. Nurture

Biologists' theories on nature/nurture differences really go back to the 1950s. They were very heavily nature vs. nurture oriented, especially in the 1950s and 1960s. There were different theories about it's either/or. Some people were saying that genes had more to do with it, and some were saying that environment had more to do with it. Some people were saying that it was a combination of the two. Some people were saying that it was a combination of the two, but some people were saying that it was a combination of the two, but some people were saying that it was a combination of the two.

Biologists' theories on the fact that some behaviors come from genes and some come from environment are very interesting. Some people were saying that genes had more to do with it, and some were saying that environment had more to do with it. Some people were saying that it was a combination of the two, but some people were saying that it was a combination of the two, but some people were saying that it was a combination of the two.
