Different Accent:

English Grammar, Adapted to the Different Classes of Learners Lindley Murray, 1835 Murray's English grammar, adapted to the different classes of learners, enlarged by J. Davis Lindley Murray, 1830 Production and Perception of Thematic Contrast in German Bettina Braun, 2005 Variations in speech melody intonation can be used to express different meanings e.g. question vs. statement, friendliness. Yet intonational information is hardly used in present-day linguistic models. When intonational information is used, it is mostly based on introspection rather than on empirical investigation. Almost exclusively, a one-to-one relation between accent types and semantic function is assumed. This book focuses on an empirical investigation of thematic contrast in German. Thematic contrast has received considerable attention in semantics because sentences with contrastive themes can be used to imply propositions of various kinds without saying them explicitly. In this book, first, an acoustic comparison between sentences produced in contrastive and non-contrastive contexts is described. Intonational realisation is quantified in terms of the height and position of tonal targets. The perceptual reality of different productions and the relevance of different acoustic cues are tested by means of rating experiments. Finally, the data are prosodically annotated by a group of linguists to explore the validity and explanatory power of different accent categories for contrastive and non-contrastive themes in German. Q & Eh Dianne Bardsley, Janet Holmes, Laurie Bauer, Paul Warren, 2011-11-01 Fascinating answers to quirky questions about language. Why is it not wrong to be doubly negative? Where do you place the stress in such words as dissect? Where do wowsers, crawler, thumper, and the f-word come from? Do New Zealanders mangle the English language? Should we say different from or to or than? We use it every day, but what is this thing called language, and are there rights and wrongs about its use? Four leading linguists with specific interest in New Zealand English tackle the common place and quirky questions that arise from what we say, read, and write. Funny, accessible, informative.
