

DEALING WITH DIFFICULT PARENTS

SOME PARENTS ARE MORE DIFFICULT THAN OTHERS...

Most education professionals will agree that managing the parents is far more difficult than managing the students. You'd probably also agree that 5% of the parents cause 95% of the duress.

This niche course was designed by an organisational psychologist specifically for Education Professionals. We also recommend inviting non-teaching staff, so the school has an integrated strategy to deal with difficult parents.

Difficult parents have a knack of weaving around your protocols. So it's important to have a robust strategy in place. Of course parents have a right to air their views. But they don't have a right to menace and cause unpleasantness to staff. Participants will also discover techniques to diffuse a situation quickly before it escalates.

Because of their size, parents may be difficult to discipline properly.

— R. J. O'Rourke

When you become a parent, or a teacher, you turn into a manager of this whole system. You become the person controlling the bubble of innocence around a child, regulating it.

— Kazuo Ishiguro
