Bartleby, the Scrivener Herman Melville, 2020-04-06 I am a rather elderly man The nature of my avocations for the last thirty years has brought me into more than ordinary contact with what would seem an interesting and somewhat singular set of men of whom as yet nothing that I know of has ever been written I mean the law copyists or scriveners I have known very many of them professionally and privately and if I pleased could relate divers histories at which good natured gentlemen might smile and sentimental souls might weep But I waive the biographies of all other scriveners for a few passages in the life of Bartleby who was a scrivener of the strangest I ever saw or heard of While of other law copyists I might write the complete life of Bartleby nothing of that sort can be done I believe that no materials exist for a full and satisfactory biography of this man It is an irreparable loss to literature Bartleby was one of those beings of whom nothing is ascertainable except from the original sources and in his case those are very small What my own astonished eyes saw of Bartleby that is all I know of him except indeed one vague report which will appear in the sequel

Bartleby, the Scrivener Illustrated Herman Melville, 2020-07-14 The narrator is an elderly unnamed Manhattan lawyer with a comfortable business in legal documents He already employs two scriveners Nippers and Turkey to copy legal documents by hand but an increase in business leads him to advertise for a third He hires the forlorn looking Bartleby in the hope that his calmness will soothe the irascible temperaments of the other two

An office boy nicknamed Ginger Nut completes the staff. At first Bartleby produces a large volume of high quality work but one day when asked to help proofread a document Bartleby answers with what soon becomes his perpetual response to every request: "I would prefer not to." To the dismay of the narrator and the irritation of the other employees, Bartleby performs fewer and fewer tasks and eventually none, instead spending long periods of time staring out one of the office's windows at a brick wall. The narrator makes several futile attempts to reason with Bartleby and to learn something about him, but when the narrator stops by the office one Sunday morning he discovers that Bartleby has started living there. Tension builds as business associates wonder why Bartleby is always there. Sensing the threat to his reputation but emotionally unable to evict Bartleby, the narrator moves his business out. Soon the new tenants come to ask for help in removing Bartleby, who now sits on the stairs all day and sleeps in the building's doorway at night. The narrator visits Bartleby and attempts to reason with him, to his own surprise he invites Bartleby to live with him, but Bartleby declines the offer. Later the narrator returns to find that Bartleby has been forcibly removed and imprisoned in the Tombs. Finding Bartleby glummer than usual during a visit, the narrator bribes a turnkey to make sure he gets enough food. When the narrator returns a few days later to check on Bartleby, he discovers that he died of starvation, having preferred not to eat. Sometime afterwards the narrator hears a rumor that Bartleby had worked in a dead letter office and reflects that dead letters would have made anyone of Bartleby's temperament sink into an even darker gloom. The story closes with the narrator's resigned and pained sigh: "Ah Bartleby! Ah humanity!"

Bartleby by Herman Melville is a poignant exploration of alienation and the human condition set against the backdrop of bustling Wall Street in 19th century New York. The enigmatic Bartleby, a copyist hired by the story's narrator, initially proves a diligent worker. However, as the demands of the job weigh heavy on him, Bartleby utters his now famous refrain: "I would prefer not to." This seemingly innocuous statement transforms into a profound act of passive resistance, marking the beginning of Bartleby's descent into a realm of existential isolation. Melville's narrative delves into the complexities of individual autonomy and societal expectations, unraveling a tale that resonates with themes of free will and the consequences of rebelling against the machine of conformity.

HERMAN MELVILLE 1819-1891 was an American poet and novelist. Melville was not popular during his own lifetime and largely forgotten upon his death, however during the 20th century his work was rediscovered and his novel Moby Dick (1851) is today considered one of the great American novels.

literature HERMAN MELVILLE Bartleby, The Scrivener Annotated Herman Melville, 2021-04-04 This story in its most basic stripped down form is a simple one a successful lawyer in need of assistance hires a new scrivener a kind of human Xerox machine to join his small firm Enter Bartleby a quiet initially efficient anti social little man Bartleby proceeds to work well as a copyist but refuses to help out with any other office tasks or rather he simply prefers not to The lawyer and his other employees are shocked but Bartleby just won't do what they ask Bartleby is always in the office either working or staring out the window at a facing wall and it turns out that he actually lives in the office Eventually this refusal grows more bizarre when Bartleby announces that he will no longer work as a copyist but prefers simply to stay in the office and not do any work Finally he is firmly asked to leave but he just doesn't Rather than take any more drastic measures to get Bartleby out of his office the lawyer actually picks up and moves his practice elsewhere Another practice moves into the building only to discover that Bartleby is still a fixture there The new occupants complain to the Narrator but he tells them the truth Bartleby isn't his responsibility At the end of their rope the new occupants have the police arrest Bartleby The story concludes with Bartleby in prison He prefers not to do anything there either and even prefers not to eat The Narrator goes to visit Bartleby but unsurprisingly he can't get through to the strange scrivener Eventually Bartleby wastes away and starves to death leaving only the Narrator to mourn him As a rather odd end note the narrator informs us that Bartleby previously worked as a clerk in an obscure branch of the Post Office known as the Dead Letter Office sorting through undeliverable mail We have to wonder what kind of effect these dead letters must have had on his psyche But still Bartleby is a mystery left unsolved
