Barn Party Claire O'Brien, Tim Archbold, 2005-05-12 Chicken decides to hold a party but Cockerel makes trouble by trying to exclude the animals he thinks are too untidy "Dame Curtsey's" Book of Party Pastimes for the Up-to-date Hostess Ellye Howell Glover, 1914 The First Time Ever Jan G. Otterstrom Fonnesbeck, 2012-01-10 Oh how the truth does bite After class had closed standing by the desk of my seventh grade teacher I was receiving a large spoon full of that bitter but necessary medicine called truth Well now Freddy Maguyer Tarrant said the crotchety old Irish teacher Here you are showing up on your first day at this school for the blind with all the qualifications that should send you straight back to the fourth or fifth grade However since you are twelve years old I'll give you just one chance to buckle down and work your way out of your abysmal condition of ignorance Just in this first day of class I have learned that you have no understanding of numbers and most remarkably you do not even know the alphabet You must have been living in a cave Furthermore it is inconceivable that the teachers you have had in the past have brought you to this point knowing so little They too must have lived in caves Standing silently by Miss Feelin's desk I felt a deep and overwhelming sense of dread and yet a deeper sense of burning shame I knew in my heart of hearts that what she said was true Two hundred miles from home in a boarding school for the blind knowing nothing I thought when Miss Feelin said Now here is a poem in braille Freddy that you must learn by heart and recite before the class on Friday and no excuses This poem is entitled To a Waterfowl by William Cullen Bryant and in this poem there are five words in particular that you must remember to your dying day yes to your dying day These five words are Lone wandering but not lost I repeat Lone wandering but not lost and you must never ever forget these words These five words burst from old Miss Feelin with a nerve shattering shriek with her knuckles banging on her desk top for emphasis Now you remember what I've told and be off to your next class for you remind me of an Irish fiddle all strings and no bow I expect that every vagrant breeze that comes along will have its way with you That was 1938 and now it is seventy three years later And yes I did learn those miserable numbers and even learned the alphabet Those five words Lone wandering but not lost have stood me in good stead and yes these vagrant breezes rushing down from these old old hills around Palmares Costa Rica do have their way with me They touch the strings of my heart and set the memories to dancing I invite you to read reflect and enjoy the First Time Ever The Puritan, 1900 Bright Ideas for Entertaining Mrs. Herbert B.
