

Dealing with the Deficit of Primary Healthcare Workers¹

Ryan Joseph Martinez² and Benjamin Velasco³

Introduction

Republic Act No. 7160, or the Local Government Code of 1991, mandates that municipal governments are principally responsible for providing primary healthcare services. However, improvements to these health services have fallen short of expectations. One key factor is the inequitable distribution of human resources for health (HRH), budget appropriation, medical supplies, and modern health facilities. Municipalities have varying policies and experiences in improving the quality of healthcare services.

Still, grassroots initiatives in innovative health projects exist in geographically isolated and disadvantaged areas (GIDAs). Primarily geared toward addressing the shortage of primary healthcare workers in local communities, these initiatives address longstanding inequities and value multisectoral participation. They are also driven and led by community members, and are embedded in the context and needs of the communities they aim to serve. In the context of the pandemic, these values become essential in the recovery of the country from the COVID-19 crisis.

Universal healthcare within the primary healthcare approach

Article II, Section 15 of the 1987 Constitution declares the policy of protecting and promoting the “right to health of the people and instilling health consciousness among them.” Meanwhile, President Benigno Aquino III expanded healthcare coverage with the Kalusugan Pangkalahatan (Healthcare for All) through Administrative Order No. 2010-0036. In February 2019, President Rodrigo Duterte signed the Republic Act No. 11223, or the Universal Health Care (UHC) Act.

The UHC Act aims to “guarantee equitable access to quality and affordable health care” (Section 3b) and streamline the processes of government
