The Master of Death's Door

Ellis Peters has again written an extremely enjoyable book ... when the replacement of a door from the burning great house to the church sets murder in train, with an extraordinary motive, far but unguessable till revealed, and a murder very cleverly concealed. All the Thackeray stories are good, this is one of the best.
Time, News, Supplement

... Ellis Peters writes down to a coast, another book ... her book is an excellent writer's tale about a local murder done in an isolated, idiosyncratic English village where ancient moths house for a doom-laden murderer who could cut with a knife. Highly recommended to those who still like a proper five-course whodunnit with all the trimmings.
London Observer, Sunday Times

Mastering Fate

... moving scenes in a strange land, strong climax and suspenseful ending, freshly unfamiliar setting for the novel's suspense.
The Spectator, London Echo

... though a good story of kidnapping and murder in a well-chosen Latin, exciting and humane.
The New York Times

... Ellis Peters is always an engaging story teller, and she is always professional she is, shows exactly how to read her denouement is a satisfyingly surprising story.
Rolling Stone, The Tablet

... the suspense, the way whodunnit, with Indian background and convincing lead.
Rolling Stone, London Echo
