

Reading Questions

1. Microscopy resolution

1. What is the relationship between resolving power and the wavelength of light? How does this relationship change as the wavelength decreases?

As the wavelength decreases, resolution increases.

2. What types of resolution are involved in the three-step hierarchy of light?

1. Diffraction

2. Aberrations: differences among the structures being illuminated resulting through their position in space.

3. Contrast: the extent of the phase differences. It does not necessarily decrease with the wavelength. It depends on the structure of the specimen. A specimen may exhibit low contrast with light of the greatest effective wavelength, even though the wavelength is within the phase-matching or contrast-matching range.

3. It's generally accepted that resolution is  $\lambda/2$ . What does this relationship tell us about the relationship between resolution and wavelength? How does this relationship change as the wavelength decreases?

As the wavelength decreases, resolution increases. This is not always the case, however, because resolution is also dependent on the illumination. For example, light microscopy resolution is  $\lambda/2$  only when the illumination is incoherent. Resolution is  $\lambda/4$  when the illumination is coherent.

4. What is the relationship of the two paragraphs? What do you think the author intended to illustrate with the two paragraphs? He was trying to show that resolution is not always  $\lambda/2$ . The relationship of resolution to wavelength is  $\lambda/4$  when the illumination is coherent and  $\lambda/2$  when the illumination is incoherent. The author intended to show that resolution is not always  $\lambda/2$ .
