

Towards a global alcohol policy: alcohol, public health and the role of WHO

In 1983 the World Health Assembly declared alcohol-related problems to be among the world's major health concerns. Since then, alcohol consumption has risen in developing countries, where it takes a heavy toll. Alcohol-related problems are at epidemic levels in the successor states of the Soviet Union and are responsible for 3.5% of disability-adjusted life years (DALYs) lost globally. Substantial evidence exists of the relationship between the levels and patterns of alcohol consumption on the one hand and the incidence of alcohol-related problems on the other. Over the past 20 years, research has demonstrated the effectiveness of public policies involving, for example, taxation and restrictions on alcohol availability, in reducing alcohol-related problems. In the wake of rapid economic globalization, many of these policies at national and subnational levels have been eroded, often with the support of international financial and development organizations. Development agencies and international trade agreements have treated alcohol as a normal commodity, overlooking the adverse consequences of its consumption on productivity and health. WHO is in a strong position to take the lead in developing a global alcohol policy aimed at reducing alcohol-related problems, providing scientific and statistical support, capacity-building, disseminating effective strategies and collaborating with other international organizations. Such leadership can play a significant part in diminishing the health and social problems associated with alcohol use.

Introduction

Alcohol has severe adverse effects on people's lives, on productivity and on health care systems in both developed and developing countries. In 1983 the World Health Assembly declared that problems related to alcohol consumption were among the world's major public health concerns and constituted serious hazards for human health, welfare and life.

At that time, however, coordinated international action was limited because of inadequate resources and a lack of political will (1, 2). Countries were left largely to their own devices in coping with the serious problems associated with drinking. National, subnational and local efforts often reflected long histories of cultural debate and conflict over drinking, and typically made use of a combination of market regulations, customary norms and formal sanctions to limit harm from drinking. In general, nation states relied on distances and traditional trade barriers to keep issues of alcohol supply and the associated problems largely within their borders.

Accelerated economic globalization is rendering obsolete the notion that the problems associated with alcohol are purely local. They have been affected in three main ways.

- The global ideology of free markets has led to the dismantling of a variety of market arrangements that served to restrain and structure alcohol consumption. State and provincial alcohol monopolies in North America have been weakened or dismantled (3). In Eastern Europe and the countries in transition, alcohol monopolies were swept away along with most other government intrusions in the market (4). Many of the municipal beer halls in southern African countries have been privatized (5). The privatization of alcohol production and distribution has often been suggested, encouraged or imposed on developing countries by international development agencies (6).
- Trade agreements, trade dispute mechanisms and the growth of new sales media have effectively reduced the ability of national and subnational governments to control local alcohol markets. The influence of trade agreements and trade dispute decisions in breaking down controls, including price control through taxation, has been documented most fully for North America (7) and Europe (8, 9), but these mechanisms have also been operating in the developing world.
