Multiculturalism in Canada Ronald J. Samuda, John W. Berry, Michel Laferrière, 1984 The Canadian Anthology of Social Studies Roland Case, Penney Clark, 1999 Key Issues in Bilingualism and Bilingual Education Colin

Baker, 1988 The book looks at world wide evidence on issues surrounding bilingualism and bilingual education These issues include the relationship between bilingualism and intelligence the advantages and disadvantages of bilingual education and the role of attitude and motivation in bilingualism Multicultural Education in Western Societies James A.

Banks, James Lynch, 1986 The Education of Linguistic and Cultural Minorities in the OECD Countries Stacy Churchill, 1986 Revue Canadienne Des Langues Vivantes, 1994 The Catalan Immersion Program Josep M.

Artigal, 1991 This book describes an immersion program school education conducted in a language different from that used at home from a psycholinguistic sociolinguistic and methodological view The research is based on the more than 70 000 children in the Catalan immersion program and the characteristic features of this program have relevance to researchers and practitioners in other countries The book begins by describing the conditions to be fulfilled by any immersion program in order to be of benefit to the children taking part in it As assessment is made as to how experiments carried out in Catalonia meet these basic prerequisites The book then examines the specific characteristics of the immersion program in Catalonia Two features are singled out for particular attention the low sociocultural background of the pupils and the early age 3 4 years of the children when the program begins By analyzing these two variables the author is able to revise certain theoretical and methodological aspects of second language learning the prime role often attributed to comprehension over production and the hypothesis that a threshold level of mastery of LI home language is needed to gain access to the second language The book describes a process whereby L2 is acquired in such a way as to permit meaningful and effective comprehension and production in the new language from the very outset stressing that L2 is learned as it is used instead of being learned first and used later Schooling in a Plural Canada John R. Mallea, 1989 This text adopts a case study approach to the analysis of schooling in a plural society It is divided into two parts The first part provides a critical review of relevant theory the second focuses on the application of this theory in the Canadian context Part one begins by setting out the limits of traditional theories of pluralism race and ethnic relations and schooling This is followed by a discussion of contemporary forms of pluralism In addition to cultural pluralism normative institutional structural political and socio economic forms of pluralism are discussed These are then juxtaposed with theories and concepts drawn from the new sociology of education literature Reproduction correspondence and resistance theories of schooling are reviewed and their potential contribution to our understanding of schooling in plural societies analysed Particular attention is paid to the relevance of concepts such as cultural hegemony cultural capital and cultural legitimation In part two following a brief historical review of the conflictual nature of schooling in Canada three competing views of Canadian culture and society monocultural bicultural and multicultural are described and their contradictions and tensions discussed Educational systems it is argued are part of a much broader framework of interlocking economic political and cultural systems Within these systems schools frequently serve as arenas in which existing public policies are frequently contested and resisted Three contemporary Canadian examples of conflict over culture and schooling are examined aboriginal self government official language minority educational rights and heritage language instruction A summary and conclusions chapter underlines the importance of employing alternative theoretical concepts and frameworks
