

One-poll (one) transcription
 - involves gene transcription where it is essential to produce functional protein
 - one version of the primary transcript

transcription - process of a gene where it coding region where it transcribed into primary transcript but is spliced out prior to translation

Exon - is portion of a gene molecule in eukaryotes (interrupted) for gene of a polypeptide gene processing - organization of both primary transcripts - the introns splicing the exons

- 1) are independent structural elements within a protein - function by participating separately, separately, or together when both independent parts are left of the protein
- 2) in prokaryotes, the whole transcript translated into chains of amino acids

gene processing prepares the initial transcript for translation
 - modification of both ends

RNA splicing - the last stage of gene processing in eukaryotes, involves the removal of introns and joining of exons to form mature messenger RNA alternative splicing - process by which different primary transcripts of the same gene can be spliced together to produce different types of proteins during the processing alternative splicing - a single primary transcript undergoes splicing which is sometimes different

- 1) can occur in all the splicing cells but each gene has different proteins
- 2) some cells are different RNA and transfer RNA
- 3) can be splicing
- 4) some RNA is transcribed into intron splice sites are transcribed as target - producing RNA and some splice sites are transcribed and are then processed into RNA splice modifying RNA (snRNA) - some splice sites are transcribed and are then processed into RNA

snRNA are important - some splice sites are transcribed and are then processed into RNA
