Chapter 9

"I am one of many Alaskans who has no health insurance. I have a partner who is in private business who cannot afford health insurance. I am unemployed and have been without insurance for two years. My two children are without insurance also. We all have medical conditions which should be treated, but we cannot afford to go to the doctor. Our lives are challenged often by this fact. A major or emergency illness would be catastrophic to us".

Comments of a resident of Nenana, Alaska, 1993.(1)

INTRODUCTION

Despite its relative isolation from Washington, D.C., in many ways Alaska is very much affected by the policy debates and changes underway on a national level. This is particularly the case with health care. There are few policy issues in Alaska and across the nation of greater importance in the 1990s and beyond than health care. Long and heated debates over access, cost, and government involvement in health care have dominated the national political
