
1 A brief history of early developments in language teaching

Introduction

By the beginning of the twentieth century, language teaching was emerging as an active area of educational debate and innovation. Although language teaching has a very long history, the foundations of contemporary approaches to language teaching were developed during the early part of the twentieth century, as applied linguists and others sought to develop principles and procedures for the design of teaching methods and materials, drawing on the developing fields of linguistics and psychology. This led to a succession of proposals for what were thought to be more effective and theoretically sound language teaching methods. Language teaching in the twentieth century was characterized at different times by change and innovation and by the development of competing language teaching ideologies. The impetus for change in approaches to language teaching is generally a response to increased demand for speakers of second and foreign languages. World War II, for example, prompted the need for new ways of teaching oral skills in foreign languages, as we discuss in Chapter 4. Large-scale movement of people through immigration as well as the internationalization of education since the 1950s also created a demand for new types of language programs. And in more recent times, globalization, the rise of the Internet, and the global spread of English has also prompted a reassessment of language teaching policies and practices. This chapter, in briefly reviewing the history of language teaching methods, provides a background for the discussion of past and present methods and suggests the issues we will refer to in analyzing these methods.

The emergence of methods

Efforts to improve the effectiveness of language teaching have often focused on changes in teaching methods. Throughout history such changes have reflected changes in the goals of language teaching, such as a move toward oral proficiency rather than reading comprehension as the goal of language study; they have also reflected changes in theories of the nature of language and of language learning. The method concept in teaching – the notion of a systematic set of teaching practices based on a particular theory of language and language learning – is a powerful though controversial one, and the quest for better methods was a preoccupation of many teachers and applied linguists

Partnership and Progress Peter D. John,Peter Lucas,1994 What Is History Teaching? Husbands,1996-08-01 How do pupils make sense of the past What is the relationship between the way historians construct interpretations of the past and the way pupils learn history in schools This book draws together developments in a wide range of fields in academic history in the study of language and in classroom research on pupil learning as the basis for a distinctive approach to the teaching and learning of history in school Chris Husbands analyses four approaches to learning about the past through looking at evidence through the language of the past through story and through the imagination He emphasises the ways in which pupils and historians structure their own interpretations of history and considers the implications for teachers by examining the ways in which classroom talk writing and assessment can support the development of sophisticated understandings of the past The Development of History Teaching in the United States Up to the Civil War Charles Arthur Jaquith,1911

Principles of History Teaching W.H. Burston,2021-12-29 First published in 1963 Principles of History Teaching examines the nature of the teaching problem historical events and the problem of teaching them explanation in history and the arrangement of events for teaching and problems of the syllabus The book studies the relationship between practical problems of teaching history in school and theories about the nature of history as a subject The reader will come to question that which before seemed obvious This textbook on the theory of history teaching is for graduate students in training for non graduate teachers in training colleges who may like to study the problems they will face in greater detail and for practising teachers to reconsider their outlook They will all meet an adequate mental challenge Debates in History Teaching Ian Davies,2017-02-16 Now in its second edition Debates in History Teaching remains at the cutting edge of history education It has been fully updated to take into account the latest developments in policy research and professional practice With further exploration into the major issues that history teachers encounter in their daily professional lives it provides fresh guidance for thinking and practice for teachers within the UK and beyond Written by a range of experts in history education chapters cover all the key issues needed for clear thinking and excellent professional action This book will enable you to reach informed judgements and argue your point of view with deeper theoretical knowledge and understanding Debates include What is happening today in history education What is the purpose of history teaching What do history teachers need to know What are the key trends and issues in international contexts What is the role of evidence in history teaching and learning How should you make use of ICT in your lessons Should moral learning be an aim of history education How should history learning be assessed Debates in History Teaching remains essential reading for any student or practising teacher engaged in initial training continuing professional development or Master s level study Understanding History Teaching Christopher T. the authors pose fundamental questions about the way teachers teach and learners learn book cover Teaching and Learning in History Ola Hallden, 2012-10-12 Research on history instruction and learning is emerging as an exciting new field of inquiry The editors prepared this volume because the field is at an important moment in its development a stage where there is research of sufficient depth and breadth to warrant a collection of representative pieces The field of research on history teaching and learning connects with both traditional research on social studies and with recent cognitive analyses of domains such as mathematics and physics However the newer research goes beyond these activities as well Where traditional research approaches to social studies instruction and learning have focused on curriculum they have avoided the study of purely disciplinary features the textual components of history and the concomitant demands as well as the nature of various learners Where recent cognitive analyses of mathematics and physics have dealt with misconceptions and knowledge construction they have avoided topics such as perspective taking interpretation and rhetorical layerings The new work by contrast has been concerned with these issues as well as the careful analyses of the nature of historical tasks and the nature of disciplinary and instructional explanations The lines of research presented in these chapters are both compelling and diverse and include a range of topical questions such as What affects the quality of teaching How are historical documents interpreted in the writing of history How is history explained What are the classroom demands on an elementary school social studies teacher What does text accomplish or fail to accomplish in educational settings How do teachers think about particular topics for history teaching Although much of the research reflects a grounding in or the influence of cognitive psychology not all of it derives from that tradition Traditions of rhetoric curriculum analysis and developmental psychology are also woven throughout the chapters The editors envision this volume as a contribution to educational research in a subject matter and as a tool for practitioners concerned with the improvement of instruction in history They also anticipate that it will contribute to cognitive science Developments in History Teaching, 1980 Historical Development of the Methods of Teaching History in the Elementary and Secondary Schools of the United States Stephen Maxwell Corey, 1927
