Connected Places A. Feldhaus, 2003-12-18. This book examines the words and actions of people who live in regions in the state of Maharashtra in Western India to illustrate the idea that regions are not only created by humans but given meaning through religious practices. By exploring the people living in the area of Maharashtra, Feldhaus draws some very interesting conclusions about how people differentiate one region from others and how we use stories, rituals, and ceremonies to recreate their importance. Feldhaus discovers that religious meanings attached to regions do not necessarily have a political teleology. According to Feldhaus, there is also a chance even now that religious imagery can enrich the lives of individuals and small communities without engendering bloodshed and hatred.

Forest Ecology in India Neena Ambre Rao, 2008. Forest Ecology in India: Colonial Maharashtra 1850-1950 takes a look at the human interactions that have shaped up the ecosystem, specifically of Maharashtra, under the British colonial rule. This work is a culmination of extensive analysis of secondary sources and numerous archival primary sources, including vernacular material hitherto unexamined from the perspective of Environmental History. It traces the evolution of political, socio-cultural, and religious attitudes and administrative policies that had an impact on the forest ecology of Maharashtra. The study goes beyond a chronological narrative of events and it adopts a fresh approach where it examines the impact of the forest policies and subsequent responses from the tribals, peasants, and artisans. It looks at landmark events and struggles that shaped the resistance to the new environmental and forest laws as
