

Better catch them young, but how? A multilingual approach to dialects in education in North Brabant

Kristel Doreleijers^{1,2}

¹Tilburg University | ²Meertens Instituut

Abstract This paper discusses the state of affairs of dialect education in the southern Dutch province of North Brabant. The dialects spoken here lack formal recognition. Therefore, the province pursues a heritage policy that protects and promotes the dialects as cultural capital. However, a recent questionnaire among teachers and material developers has revealed that local and provincial initiatives for dialect education have not yet been implemented in a sustainable way in primary and secondary education (Doreleijers, 2021). Although teachers indicate willingness to implement dialect in education, there is a lack of knowledge of existing materials and a discrepancy between demand and the quality of supply. The aim of this paper is to look for ways to implement non-recognized dialects in the curriculum. It argues that the current situation in North Brabant can be improved by integrating dialects into the holistic model for multilingualism in education (Duarte & Günther-van der Meij, 2018).

1 Introduction

The present paper discusses the state of affairs of dialect education in the southern Dutch province of North Brabant. For this purpose, it takes as its starting point a questionnaire that was conducted between February and June 2021 among teachers (primary and secondary education as well as teacher training) and material developers to investigate the effectiveness and scope of current practices in dialect education (Doreleijers, 2021).³ In November 2021, the results of this questionnaire were published on the website of the cultural heritage organization Erfgoed Brabant in 's-Hertogenbosch.⁴ The aim of this paper is to outline if and how the outcomes can be implemented into a concrete educational framework.
