means objectionable but after all the mechanical texture of the clay is the most important condition it must be such as to admit of considerable pressure during the operation of molding and of retaining the forms thus impressed upon it until the burning shall have been completed Drain pipes are made in enormous numbers at the present day for agricultural purposes by means of a simple description of machinery wherein the earth is forced by a plunger through the die plates fixed at the end of a cylinder Great pains are taken it may be observed in tempering and purging the clay and in passing it through the pugmill or as in some parts of Nottinghamshire through edge rollers The molding machinery may either have an intermittent or a constant action The so called Ainslie machines are examples of the first class of machines and in remote situations where the demand is not great it is perhaps the most advantageous on account of its low cost but the very soft state in which it is necessary to use the clay and the almost inevitably consequent deformations which take place in the manufactured articles during the process of drying and burning constitute serious objections to these machines Scragg's pipe making machine is a very good instance of the class which have a constant action the quality of the goods it furnishes is considered to be superior to those supplied by the intermittent machinery A good Scragg's pipe making machine will turn out as many as pipes of 1 in diameter and 1 ft long in a day of ten hours work What ever description of machinery may be adopted however it appears that ordinary tile earth is hardly adapted to the manufacture of pipes of more than 6 or 8 in diameter Tile drains are almost invariably made by hand About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works The Publishers' Circular and General Record of British and Foreign Literature, 1888
