Code Electoral 2004:

Electoral System Incentives for Interparty and Intraparty Politics Brian F. Crisp, Patrick Cunha Silva, Santiago Olivella, Guillermo Rosas, 2025-05-12 Electoral systems are sets of formal rules that create incentives for strategic behavior on the part of voters pre candidates party elites and elected representatives including legislators and their chamber leaders Most simply they translate the choices made by voters into seats won by candidates and parties In the process rules influence both how many and which parties are viable and how elected official will go about their time in office as representatives All electoral systems share a common set of component rules and each rule can take on a number of different values When combining the values taken by these rules into a system the number of possible combinations is quite large which means that specific systems have the potential to provide precise targeted incentives that govern relationships between political parties interparty politics and within parties intraparty politics Using novel computational tools and a comprehensive and updated dataset on electoral systems this book develops precise and transparent measures of both electoral systems interparty and intraparty incentives These two simple quantities capture the extent to which a given system encourages the election of a limited number of large parties or a larger number of relatively smaller ones and the extent to which the lawmaking process will be conducted by unified programmatic parties or by individually noteworthy politicians They thus allow scholars to test the extent to which electoral rules shape political outcomes about which we care and they allow practitioners to select the electoral system that is likely to encourage the form of representation they desire The book shows that these indicators of electoral system incentives can explain variation in interparty politics the effective number of parties parties locations in the policy space congruence between citizens preferences and policy and intraparty politics the content of campaigns the amount of constituency service provided the shape of legislative institutions levels of party discipline and the balance struck between programmatic policy and pork barrel politics Comparative Politics is a series for researchers teachers and students of political science that deals with contemporary government and politics Global in scope books in the series are characterized by a stress on comparative analysis and strong methodological rigour The series is published in association with the European Consortium for Political Research For more information visit www.ecprnet.eu The series is edited by Nicole Bolleyer Chair of Comparative Political Science Geschwister Scholl Institut LMU Munich and Jonathan Slapin Professor of Political Institutions and European Politics Department of Political Science University of Zurich

Parties and Parliaments in Southeast Asia Roland Rich, 2014-06-23 Political parties are an essential ingredient in a modern democracy They are also seen as the least trusted and most problematic institution in most democratic systems While there have been attempts to strengthen parties through institutional design and capacity building a new strategy has been to quarantine them from parts of parliament Within the space of a few years the Philippines Thailand and Indonesia implemented designs for parliamentary representation that proscribed the established political parties from a parliamentary chamber or part thereof Using these three countries as case studies this book traces the historical context for institutional designs the intentions behind them and their implementation through at least one full parliamentary term It investigates the conceptual architecture of the non partisan designs identifying corporatism as one discredited alternative and championship as another While there is a yearning for exemplary people as representatives the designers have struggled to find a successful means of having these champions elected to office The book concludes that non partisan chambers based on the evidence to date are not viable This book is of interest to scholars of Southeast Asian Politics Party Politics Governance Institutions and Democracy Cook County Republican Party V.
