

Background to CBT : Social Learning Theory and Modelling

Background to these approaches can be found in the work principally, but not exclusively, in work of Bandura (1977)

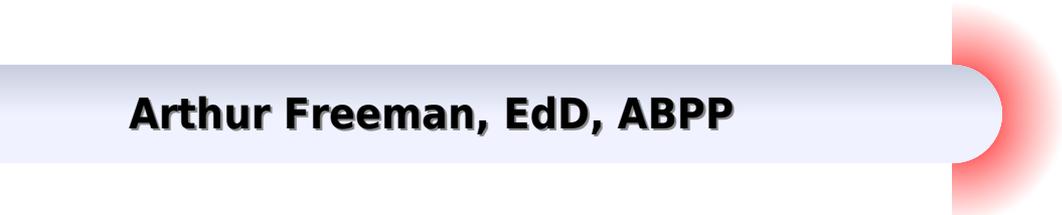

People's learning is achieved through their perceptions and thinking about what they experience. They learn by copying the examples of others around them

2 sets of expectations:

- Outcome expectations – behaving in a certain way will produce a particular outcome
- Efficacy expectations – belief that the person has the capacity to produce successfully the behaviour necessary for achieving the desired outcome
