Buxton Chase:

Buxton Chase William Foster, Sir, Lynda Blankenship, 2004-04 Martin LaBurdge sets out to rebuild his shattered life after the death of his wife by focusing his energy on an invention that is certain to revive his stale career. Only before he has the opportunity to do so news of his uncle's death sends misfortune his way once again. With an unexpected twist in his professional objectives Martin departs Chicago for England into the remote countryside of Devon where he is faced with the task of settling his uncle's affairs. Little did he know that this journey would forever change his life. Drawing on a system of living cultivated from his late wife Martin uses his intuition to lead him to a horrific discovery. Now with the knowledge of his uncle's murder fueling him he manipulates circumstances for Sara Jenkins who soon learns the truth behind her father's death. Joined by tragedy and driven by an obsession to bring justice to a double murder Martin and Sara begin sorting through inconsistencies and delve into the quirky personalities of those connected to the estate of Buxton. After finding the first of three mechanical drawings the motive for the murders is exposed but the danger ahead could never have been anticipated.

Relics of Modernity Andrew F. Wood, 2025-06-12 This collection of essays expands upon an emerging topic within and beyond the field of communication studies that challenges students and scholars of the built environment to peer beyond the somewhat typical collection of monuments, museums, and memories often found in essays related to space and place to consider the role of ruins as lenses upon modernity. These locales which include economic ghost towns, industrial relics, prison sites, and other places associated with so-called dark tourism generally conjure feelings of melancholy, connotations of failure. While their assemblages of moldy floors, waterlogged walls, shattered windows, and sagging roofs do not make for traditional tourist snapshots, ruins possess a potential to inspire awe, an awareness of the tenuous nature of modern confidence, a reverence for the passing of things. In their inquiry and investigation one may encounter oddly sublime traces and fragments of the contemporary age. Seeking to better understand the rhetoric and performances of ruins, contributors to this book have crafted chapters that are theoretically sophisticated and vividly authored. The resulting collection of nine essays surveys ruins within and beyond the United States to examine a unique and unexpected constellation of ideas related to authenticity, identity, memory, representation, and power.

Lost Buxton Rachelle Chase, 2017 Buxton, Iowa was an unincorporated coal mining town established by Consolidation Coal Company in 1900. At a time when Jim Crow laws and segregation kept blacks and whites separated throughout the nation, Buxton was integrated. African American and Caucasian residents lived, worked, and went to school side by side. The company provided miners with equal housing and equal pay regardless of race and offered opportunities for African Americans beyond mining. Professional African Americans included a bank cashier, the justice of the peace, constables, doctors, attorneys, store clerks, and teachers. Businesses such as a meat market, a drugstore, a bakery, a music store, hotels, millinery shops, a saloon, and restaurants were owned by African Americans. For 10 years African Americans made up more than half of the population. Unfortunately, in the early 1920s the mines closed and today only a cemetery a few foundations and some crumbling ruins remain      Annual Report of the Commissioner of Insurance Tennessee.
