Product Development

Start with interviews with prospective customers — what features do they value? What will they pay for it?

Determine the viability of an idea and what is possible to achieve.

Ask open-ended questions to determine what's wanted. Are there any desired features or functions that weren't considered?

Discover or refine features that may open up new markets or re-define existing ones.

Refine through customer validation. How many are willing to buy the product? How much are they willing to pay?

Once the fundamental value is determined, develop the options, functions and additional features that complement it.

What's the language potential customers use to discuss the features and product? How can you better position it?

Ready to scale up production.
