British Science Fiction Cinema:

British Science Fiction Cinema I.Q. Hunter,2002-01-04 British Science Fiction Cinema is the first substantial study of a genre which despite a sometimes troubled history has produced some of the best British films from the prewar classic Things to Come to Alien made in Britain by a British director The contributors to this rich and provocative collection explore the diverse strangeness of British science fiction from literary adaptations like Nineteen Eighty Four and A Clockwork Orange to pulp fantasies and creature features far removed from the acceptable face of British cinema Through case studies of key films like The Day the Earth Caught Fire contributors explore the unique themes and concerns of British science fiction from the postwar boom years to more recent productions like Hardware and examine how science fiction cinema drew on a variety of sources from TV adaptations like Doctor Who and the Daleks to the horror sf crossovers produced from John Wyndham s cult novels The Day of the Triffids and The Midwich Cuckoos filmed as Village of the Damned How did budget restrictions encourage the use of the invasion narrative in the 1950s films And how did films such as Unearthly Stranger and Invasion reflect fears about the decline of Britain s economic and colonial power and the threat of female sexuality British Science Fiction Cinema celebrates the breadth and continuing vitality of British sf film making in both big budget productions such as Brazil and Event Horizon and cult exploitation movies like Inseminoid and Lifeforce

British Science Fiction Film and Television Tobias Hochscherf,James Leggott,Donald E. Palumbo,2014-01-10 Written by international experts from a range of disciplines these essays examine the uniquely British contribution to science fiction film and television Viewing British SF as a cultural phenomenon that challenges straightforward definitions of genre nationhood authorship and media the editors provide a conceptual introduction placing the essays within their critical context Essay topics include Hammer science fiction films the various incarnations of Doctor Who Stanley Kubrick s A Clockwork Orange and such 21st century productions as 28 Days Later and Torchwood

The British Reception of 1950s Science Fiction Cinema Matthew William Jones, 2011 Scholarship on 1950s American science fiction cinema has tended to explore the relationship between these films and their domestic contexts of production and reception They are often characterised as reflections of US anxieties about communism and nuclear technology However many such films were exported to Britain where these concerns were articulated and understood differently The ways in which this different national context of reception shaped British interpretations of American science fiction cinema of this era has not yet been accounted for Similarly although some research has addressed 1950s British science fiction this scholarship has been comparatively concise and has left gaps in our knowledge about the domestic reception of these films Unable to draw on a British reception history of domestic and US 1950s science fiction cinema debates about the genre have sometimes been underpinned by the presumption that western audiences responded to these films in a uniform manner This thesis seeks to complicate our understanding of the genre by suggesting the specificity of the British reception history of science fiction cinema during the 1950s The paucity of documentary evidence of British responses to 1950s science fiction films makes an audience study impossible Within the intellectual framework of the New Film History this thesis instead employs a contextually activated approach to reception Making extensive use of archival sources newsreels newspapers magazines and other such documentary evidence it explores some of the different contexts in which 1950s science fiction cinema was received in Britain and suggests how these factors might have shaped the interpretation of the genre The thesis examines the interplay between American and British 1950s science fiction cinema and the British public understanding of communism immigration nuclear technology and scientific advancement It contributes to our knowledge of these films by demonstrating that Britons did not necessarily understand 1950s science fiction cinema in the same way as Americans because they were party to a differently inflected series of public debates It exposes the flexibility of the metaphors utilised by the genre during this period and their susceptibility to reinterpretation in different national contexts This research makes visible in a more extensive manner than has yet been accomplished the specificity of the British reception history of 1950s science fiction cinema and thereby provides a means to resist assumptions about the similarity of western audiences during this decade Its conclusions call for further research into other national reception histories of these films so that they too are not overshadowed by the better known American history of the genre and into the possibility that the British reception history of other genres might similarly have been obscured

Science Fiction Cinema and 1950s Britain Matthew Jones, 2017-11-30 For the last sixty years discussion of 1950s science fiction cinema has been dominated by claims that the genre reflected US paranoia about Soviet brainwashing and the nuclear bomb However classic films such as Invasion of the Body Snatchers 1956 and It Came from Outer Space 1953 and less familiar productions such as It The Terror from Beyond

Space 1958 were regularly exported to countries across the world The histories of their encounters with foreign audiences have not yet been told Science Fiction Cinema and 1950s Britain begins this task by recounting the story of 1950s British cinema goers and the aliens and monsters they watched on the silver screen Drawing on extensive archival research Matthew Jones makes an exciting and important intervention by locating American science fiction films alongside their domestic counterparts in their British contexts of release and reception He offers a radical reassessment of the genre demonstrating for the first time that in Britain which was a significant market for and producer of science fiction these films gave voice to different fears than they did in America While Americans experienced an economic boom low immigration and the conferring of statehood on Alaska and Hawaii Britons worried about economic uncertainty mass immigration and the dissolution of the Empire Science Fiction Cinema and 1950s Britain uses these and other differences between the British and American experiences of the 1950s to tell a new history of the decade s science fiction cinema exploring for the first time the ways in which the genre came to mean something unique to Britons

British Cinema and the Cold War Tony Shaw,2001 Shaw analyses key films of the period including High Treason which put a British McCarthyism on celluloid the fascinatingly ambiguous science fiction thriller The Quatermass Experiment the court room drama based on the trial of Hungary s Cardinal Mindszenty The Prisoner the dystopic The Damned made by one of Hollywood s blacklisted directors Joseph Losey and the CIA funded animated version of George Orwell s classic novel Animal Farm The result is a deeply probing study of how Cold War issues were refracted through British films compared with their imported American and East European counterparts and how the British public received this war propaganda
