In this article, we listed common pitfalls in cardiology medical billing, and avoiding them would ensure the financial sustainability of your cardiology practice.

Common Pitfalls in Cardiology Medical Billing

1. Inappropriate Use of Modifier

Modifiers are two-digit codes that show you've somehow altered the service in the original five-digit CPT code. Inappropriate use of modifiers like modifier -22, -25, -51, -52, and -53 is one of the common pitfalls in cardiology medical billing. For example, when you submit a claim to the insurance carrier that is coded with a 25 modifier, you are telling the carrier to pay you for both the E/M visit and the minor procedure. The insurance carriers will review claims with an E/M and procedure codes for accuracy. Ensure that when you bill both codes on the same day, your documentation must support both codes. Document adequately for the E/M separate from the procedure. Typically, when these services have been audited payment was rescinded due to incorrect coding, incomplete documentation, and/or lack of medical necessity to support both codes billed on the same day by the same physician.
