Dot Bomb:

Dot.Bomb Australia Kate Askew,2011 Google became a verb countries waged war games in the new digital universe and WikiLeaks sent shockwaves through a superpower We got to this point from a place that was called the dot com bubble Few booms in Australia have been faster or more furious than this bubble The brightest and best investors dived in technology geeks grew into overnight millionaires and miners stopped digging dirt and started surfing the net The market surged and crashed as the dot com bubble became the dot com bomb Australia witnessed a truly extraordinary efflorescence of unrestrained investment fervour Tagged as irrational exuberance by Alan Greenspan during the boom s formative period it became a wild moment of fin de siecle and millennial madness A new way of valuing companies on cash flow entirely rather than boring old profitability was invented to match the new technology in play What began with internet services and telecom start ups stretched to any kind of business that could be sold on the net from Balmain bugs to sex toys Some entrepreneurs jumped off the rollercoaster as millionaires more stayed on crashed or sank without trace While there have been a number of books in the USA on this extraordinary historical period this is the first comprehensive colourful telling of the wild Australian ride And looking back we learn that while the internet promised to level the business playing field it has in fact done the opposite as the market dominance of Google Apple and Facebook attest
