Biomass Production By Fast Growing Trees:

Biomass Production by Fast-Growing Trees J.S. Pereira,J.J. Landsberg,2012-12-06 Even though most of the biomass of the planet is in forests we live in a world where wood as a raw material and its products are increasingly scarce This is particularly so in important areas such as the European Community which is far from self sufficient in terms of wood In recent years the need to intensify forest production and in some cases to utilize abandoned agricultural land for forestry has focussed world wide attention on the economic importance of fast growing tree plantations These are usually managed as short rotations growing cycles of less than 15 years often for the production of industrial raw materials or biomass for energy Under the designation of fast growing tree plantations or short rotation silviculture one may find ecosystems managed for different economic objectives with different intensities of technical intervention and different levels of productivity They may include any of a wide range of species grown under various environmental conditions A common factor however is the greater possibility that exists relative to conventional forestry for manipulation of both the environment and the genetics of the trees Biomass Production with Fast Growing Tree Species in Short Rotation Periods Horst Weisgerber,International Poplar Commission. Session,Hessische Forstliche Versuchsanstalt (Germany),1988 Biomass Production from Fast Growing Tree Plantation Somkiat Klunklin,Mahāwitthayālai Mahidon,Mahāwitthayālai Mahidon. Khana Singwætlōm læ Sapphayākōṅsāt,1983 Nutrient Uptake and Cycling in Forest Ecosystems L.O. Nilsson,Reinhard F. Hüttel,U.T. Johansson,2012-12-06 From the research results and discussions presented in this book it becomes clear that a profound understanding of the various interrelationships of the nutritional aspects allows the implementation of specific management strategies to improve stability and productivity of forest ecosystems In particular the effects of environmental changes as related to the impacts of air pollution global change and land use on nutrient uptake and cycling processes in forest ecosystems are dealt with in detail The book is divided into six main issues and each topic contains reviews as well as selected results of recent studies Innovative practices in the sustainable management of fast-growing trees Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,IPC,2025-05-12 Planted forests account for 7 percent of the global forest area covering 290 million hectares ha of land About 131 million ha of planted forests are intensively cultivated for productive purposes with fast growing trees FGTs Fast growing trees have been developed and used for millennia to provide wood and non wood products to rural communities as well as direct and non direct benefits to urban societies Globally FGT plantations are comprised of a variety of tree species in temperate subtropical and tropical biomes The objective of this publication Innovative practices in the sustainable management of fast growing trees lessons learned from poplars and willows and experiences with other fast growing trees around the world is to address the knowledge gaps and the current and potential development of FGTs at the global scale by highlighting successful innovative FGT practices that can help sustain people and the environment Further this book aims to make this information relevant and accessible to a diverse range of stakeholders involved in the agricultural and forestry sectors including researchers landowners technical operators and planners and policymakers In this context the authors have proposed a comprehensive list of references as part of the methodology In total 43 authors from nine countries have contributed to this book bringing their ideas experience and expertise to advance innovation in FGT science management and policy
