Coping With Childrens Temperament A Guide For Professionals:

Coping With Children's Temperament William B. Carey, Sean McDevitt, 1995-08-25 Why does one child and not another in a normal family develop a behavior problem If a child is sensitive and likely to complain how does that affect the quality and quantity of the medical care provided What happens to the neurologically intact child who has trouble paying attention in school Children's temperaments make a substantial contribution to their environments and their interactions with them Certain of these largely inborn behavioral style differences which are not abnormal in themselves may lead to clinical problems by predisposing children to abrasive incompatible relationships with caregivers In this book William B Carey and Sean C McDevitt present a clear concise summary of the recent clinical research on temperament in particular from the last ten years coupled with practical suggestions on how to use this information in a variety of clinical and educational settings These management strategies were assembled from their own extensive clinical experience and that of others They take the professional psychologist physician nurse teacher day care worker and social worker through all the stages of a child's life to show how the effects of temperament play out in infancy the preschool years middle childhood and adolescence Richly illustrated with detailed case examples this outstanding book brings theory and practice to life and shows how all who work with children can improve their care by understanding these important differences The Oxford Handbook of Infant, Toddler, and Preschool Mental Health Assessment Rebecca DelCarmen-Wiggins, Alice S. Carter, 2019-12-02 This fully updated new edition of The Oxford Handbook of Infant Toddler and Preschool Mental Health Assessment remains the leading reference for those seeking to understand and assess mental health in infants and young children Detailing the latest empirical research on measures and methods of infant and young child assessment and providing clinically applicable information for practitioners this handbook takes a closer look at current developmentally based conceptualizations of mental health function and dysfunction in infants and young children as well as current and new diagnostic criteria in specific disorders such as sensory modulation dysfunction autism spectrum disorders affective disorders and post traumatic stress disorder Presented in four sections chapters correspond to four broad themes contextual factors in early assessment temperament and regulation in assessment of young children early problems and disorders and translation and varied applied settings for assessment Each chapter presents state of the science information on valid developmentally based clinical assessment and makes recommendations based on developmental theory empirical findings and clinical experience Chapters have been added to this second edition covering family assessment early care and educational environments new approaches for distinguishing temperament from psychopathology assessing language and implementing second stage screening and referral The volume recognizes and highlights the important role of developmental social and cultural contexts in approaching the challenge of assessing early problems and disorders This new updated volume will be an ideal resource for teachers researchers and a wide variety of clinicians and trainees including child psychologists and psychiatrists early

The Quality of the Relationship Between Mothers and Their Drug Exposed Infants and Its Implications for the Child's Mental Health Carolyn D. Harris-Muchell, 2006 The purpose of this study was to better understand the relationship between drug exposed infants and their mothers and how this relationship may be associated with mental health outcomes for the child Hypotheses predicted that drug exposed infants and their mothers would have more relationship impairment and a higher incidence of relationship disorders than non drug exposed infants and their mothers It was also hypothesized that greater relationship impairment would be associated with worse adaptive social behavior and more emotional and behavioral problems for children A nested case control design was used involving secondary analysis of data collected from a larger prospective cohort study Two measures were used to assess relationship problems the Parent Infant Relationship Global Assessment Scale and a Videotape Rating Scale for Relationship Disorders that was developed as part of this study Both measures were based upon Axis II of the Diagnostic Classification of Mental Health and Developmental Disorders of Infancy and Early Childhood These measures were used to code videotaped feeding interactions that occurred of the infant in the home at 3 months of age When the child was 2 years of age adaptive social behavior was measured with the Vineland Adaptive Behavior Scales and emotional and behavioral problems were assessed using the Child Behavior Checklist Results indicated that in general drug detailed comparison of drug exposed and non drug exposed dyads indicated a higher incidence of specific relationship disorders among drug exposed dyads The most prominent relationship problems were over involvement and a mixed relationship disorder that included a gestalt of neglect anxiety and anger hostility Relationship impairment was associated with better adaptive social behavior by the child in domains such as daily living skills and socialization This finding suggests that children in more dysfunctional relationships may learn to readily comply with their mother s demands to avoid feared consequences and to become more self sufficient in the face of maternal neglect or insensitivity Relationships that involved anger and hostility predicted more depression anxiety and withdrawal for children at age two
