Coping With Korea:

Coping with Korea Gary P. Steenson, 1987 Coping with the North Korea Nuclear Weapons Problem Amos A. Jordan, 1993 Examining the Emotions and Coping Mechanisms of Korean-Americans in Response to Modern-day North Korea Kelly Rivas, 2018 The purpose of this research study is to explore the emotions and coping mechanisms of Korean Americans in response to North Korea's current political climate. I hypothesize that Korean Americans have a high level of anxiety from events surrounding North Korea. I also hypothesize that in response, Korean Americans use coping methods that oftentimes does not include professional mental health services. Data is obtained through a seven question online survey. This exploratory study focuses on qualitative input generated into quantitative data. Results show that the anxiety levels of Korean Americans vary depending on their reported ancestry and birth decade. The following data also finds that the most popular coping mechanisms include talking with family or friends and also every participant believes professional mental health services are important. Openness to using mental health services seems to be affected by ancestry. The results point to the possibility that individuals who are more connected to Korean culture are less anxious about North Korea because they have been exposed to a culture where the heightened political tension has been commonplace for decades. Older participants born in the 50s perhaps have a heightened anxiety level because they grew up in a culture that has experienced the effects of the Korean War. Participants who were born in the 70s and 80s have less anxiety but anxiety increases again in participants born in the 90s perhaps due to the increased political tension in recent years through a different historical lens.

Community Series in Mental Illness, Culture, and Society: Dealing with the COVID-19 Pandemic, volume VIII Mohammadreza Shalbafan, Samer El Hayek, Renato de Filippis, 2024-06-21 The COVID 19 outbreak has impacted many areas of our lives including mental health. Lockdown and physical distancing measures have been one major effective intervention to counter the spread of the virus and reduce the impact of the disease. However they have negatively impacted mental well being and behaviors either triggering the onset of new psychiatric symptoms and diseases or amplifying pre-existing ones. The pandemic and lockdown measures have also been associated with reduced access to treatment and facilities all over the world further worsening mental health outcomes. The impact on mental health although universal varied between nations. Cultural and societal variables including norms, values, religion and stigma have played an important role in shaping COVID 19 related mental health symptoms including anxiety, depression, grief, psychosis and addiction. These sociocultural factors have also molded how mental health interventions are tailored and provided. Highlighting the intertwining relationship between the pandemic mental health and sociocultural factors are essential to managing emerging mental health symptoms adequately.

Schizophrenia in the 21st Century T.H.J. Burne, 2012-03-23 Schizophrenia is a poorly understood but very disabling group of brain disorders.
