

Kinds of Corn

DENT corn is also called "field" corn. It is a corn variety with kernels that become indented at maturity. It is a major crop used to make food, animal feed, and industrial products.

FLINT corn has hard rounded or short and flat kernels with the soft and starchy endosperm completely enclosed by a hard outer layer. It is similar to dent and is used for the same purposes. Most of it is grown in South America.

FLOUR corn, also called "soft" corn or "squaw" corn, has kernels shaped like those of flint corn and composed almost entirely of soft starch. In South America this corn is grown in various colors and used to make food and beer.

POD CORN is the only corn that has a separate covering around each kernel. Pod corn has never been grown commercially, because the husks on each kernel make it hard to use.

POPCORN has small ears and small pointed or rounded kernels with very hard corneous endosperm that, on exposure to dry heat, are popped by the expulsion of the contained moisture.

SWEET or GREEN CORN is eaten fresh, canned or frozen. It is distinguished by kernels containing a high percentage of sugar in the milk stage. Sweet corn is a good source of energy. It is also a good source of vitamins A and C. Sweet corn may have white or yellow kernels.
