Tyler offers a vivid exploration of the historical landscapes and socio-economic developments of Michigan's mining region through a captivating visual narrative. This meticulously curated collection integrates striking photography from the late 19th and early 20th centuries, capturing the essence of a burgeoning copper industry, the resilience of its workers, and the untamed beauty of the surrounding geography. From ghosts of the copper mining industry to kissing specters, Haunted Copper Country whisks you away on a whirlwind tour of this Upper Peninsula treasure. Copper Country Explorer Field Guide No. 8 Michael Forgrave, 2016-05-04 While the Copper Empire flourished north of the Portage Valley, the lands to the south continued to remain wild and remote, largely untouched by the hand of man. That would all change in 1897 with the discovery of one of the region's most productive lodes, the Baltic. Atop its copper-rich bounty would rise the soaring rock houses and sprawling surface plants of a trio of mines: the Baltic, the Trimountain, and the Champion. By 1923, all three would fall under the control of an industrial conglomerate of a size and scope rivaling even the great C. H. itself, the Copper Range Company. The Copper Range Company had begun its life as a mere common carrier railroad joining Houghton with the major railroads to the south Within three short decades however the company had managed to expand its reach into every major industry of the region In short order it had taken control of virtually every mine town mill and railroad to be found within the wide borders of the southern range The Copper Range had become an empire in its own right controlling the fate of the southern range for the next half century Copper Country History, 1994 Notes on the Copper Country of Northern Michigan W. R. Hodge, 1911 Michigan's Copper Country Ellis W. Courter, 1992 Upper Michigan's Copper Country and the Political Ecology of Copper, 1840s-1930s Jonathan A. Nordberg, Terry S. Reynolds, 2007 Mine Towns Alison K. Hoagland, 2010-04-20 During the nineteenth century the Keweenaw Peninsula of Northern Michigan was the site of America's first mineral land rush as companies hastened to profit from the region's vast copper deposits In order to lure workers to such a remote location and work long hours in dangerous conditions companies offered not just competitive wages but also helped provide the very infrastructure of town life in the form of affordable housing schools health care facilities and churches The first working class history of domestic life in Copper Country company towns during the boom years of 1890 to 1918 Alison K Hoagland's Mine Towns investigates how the architecture of a company town revealed the paternal relationship that existed between company managers and workers a relationship that both parties turned to their own advantage The story of Joseph and Antonia Putrich immigrants from Croatia punctuates and illustrates the realities of life in a booming company town While company managers provided housing as a way to develop and control a stable workforce workers often rejected this domestic ideal and used homes as an economic resource taking in boarders to help generate further income Focusing on how the exchange between company managers and a largely immigrant workforce took the form of negotiation rather than a top down system Hoagland examines surviving buildings and uses Copper Country's built environment to map this remarkable connection between a company and its workers at the height of Michigan's largest land rush Exploring Michigan's Historic Copper Country Celeste Haapala, 2011 Copper Country Rail George E. Anderson, Richard E. Taylor, 2008-10 From the railroads beginnings in the early 1870s to the complex rail network of the 1900s the advance and decline of the copper industry in Michigan's Upper Peninsula was mirrored by the railroads that served it With the abandonment in 1976 of the Houghton tracks of the Soo Line formerly the Mineral Range Duluth South Shore and Atlantic Copper Country was once again without the railroad service that built it This book seeks to tell this rich story of Copper Country railroads through a collection of pictures from various archival sources including the authors personal collections the Houghton County Historical Society Keweenaw County Historical Society the Rudolf Maki collection the Chuck Pomazal collection the Michigan Technological University Van Pelt Library Archives and the National Park Service archives 4000 Years of Copper Country History Lauri Leskinen, 1974 Calumet, Copper Country Metropolis Dave Engel, Gerry Mantel, 2002 Illustrated mining town history
