Whispers from the Grave Vitória Mendes, The brass key felt unusually cold in Margaret Sullivan s palm as she stood before the wrought iron gates of Raven s Rest Cemetery October mist clung to the weathered headstones like ghostly shrouds and the late afternoon sun cast long shadows between the ancient oaks that bordered the property She had inherited this place from her great aunt Cordelia a woman she had met only once at a childhood Christmas gathering yet who had somehow deemed her worthy of this peculiar bequest Margaret adjusted her wool coat against the autumn chill and pushed open the gate The hinges protested with a prolonged creak that seemed to echo across the cemetery grounds As the newly appointed caretaker she supposed she would need to add oil to her growing list of maintenance tasks The lawyer had been quite clear that the position came with a modest salary and free residence in the caretaker s cottage but he had also mentioned almost as an afterthought that the previous caretakers rarely stayed longer than a few months The cottage sat nestled among a grove of birch trees at the far end of the cemetery its stone walls covered in ivy that had turned brilliant shades of orange and gold Smoke curled from the chimney which struck Margaret as odd since no one should have been there She quickened her pace her boots crunching on the gravel path that wound between the graves As she approached the cottage the front door opened and an elderly man emerged wiping his hands on a kitchen towel He was perhaps seventy with silver hair that caught the dying light and eyes the color of storm clouds His face was deeply lined but kind and when he smiled Margaret felt some of her apprehension ease You must be Margaret he said extending a weathered hand I m Thomas Hartwell I ve been looking after the place until you arrived Cordelia asked me to stay on as groundskeeper if you ll have me Margaret shook his hand grateful for the human contact after the long solitary drive from the city I m pleased to meet you Thomas I have to admit I don t know much about running a cemetery

Italian Children's Literature and National Identity Maria Truglio,2017-07-20 This book bridges the fields of Children s Literature and Italian Studies by examining how turn of the century children s books forged a unified national identity for the new Italian State Through contextualized close readings of a wide range of texts Truglio shows how the 19th century concept of recapitulation which held that ontogeny the individual s development repeats phylogeny the evolution of the species underlies the strategies of this corpus Italian fairy tales novels poems and short stories imply that the personal development of the child corresponds to and hence naturalizes the modernizing development of the nation In the context of Italy s uneven and ambivalent modernization these narrative trajectories are enabled by a developmental melancholia Using a psychoanalytic lens and in dialogue with recent Anglophone Children s Literature criticism this study proposes that national identity was constructed via a process of renouncing and incorporating paternal and maternal figures rendered as compulsory steps into maturity and modernity With chapters on the heroic figure of Garibaldi the Orientalized depiction of the South and the role of girls in formation narratives this book discloses how melancholic itineraries produced gendered national subjects This study engages both well known Italian texts such as Collodi s The Adventures of Pinocchio and De Amicis Heart and Soul and books that have fallen into obscurity by authors such as Baccini Treves Gianelli and Nuccio Its approach and corpus shed light on questions being examined by Italianists Children s Literature scholars and social and cultural historians with an interest in national identity formation
