A Comfortable Death:

Achieving a Good Death Chris Palmer, 2024-10-01 People have choices and options at the end of their lives Designing and directing their own end of life journeys allows them to find meaning and fulfillment right up to the end This book aims to help people die well when the time comes as it eventually does for everyone It is possible for dying to be marked by serenity acceptance love comfort and a sense of completeness A good death from the perspective of patients with severe illness and advance care planning (ACP) in patients near end-of-life Lisa Kastbom, 2021-03-23 Previous research has indicated that what constitutes a good death is heterogenic and complex although there are some recurrent themes and similarities regardless individual background factors Studies on advance care planning ACP i e making proactive plans regarding content of care and treatment limitations on nursing home NH patients are rare Positive effects of ACPs are shown but also that these often are lacking The overall aim with this thesis was to explore the perceptions of a good death from the perspective of patients with severe illness and to investigate from different perspectives experiences of ACP in a NH context In paper I patients with cancer in a palliative phase were interviewed on their perceptions of a good death Death was viewed as a process and previous experiences on the death of others influenced their own perceptions A good death was associated with living with the prospect of imminent death preparing oneself and others for one s death and dying comfortably e g without suffering with independence and with social relations intact Some were comforted by their belief that death is predetermined and that after death there is something else Others felt uncomfortable when they viewed death as the end of the existence In paper II nurses and physicians were interviewed on their experiences of the factors that shape the ACP process in NHs Exploration of the patient s preferences regarding content of care and treatment limitations was important as well as integration of the patient s preferences and the views of the family members and staff concerning these questions ACP documentation had to be clear updated and available for staff and the implementation and reevaluation of ACP were also considered important according to the participants Significance of clinicians perceiving beneficence as well as fear of accusations of maleficence were shown to be essential factors to contemplate In a retrospective chart review paper III medical records of 367 deceased NH patients were analysed A high prevalence of ACP was shown using two different definitions of ACP ACP I and ACP II Moreover adherence to the ACP content was strong and positive associations were seen between ACP and variables of the three research aims such as diagnosis dementia physician attendance at NH and end of life EOL care In paper IV family members of deceased NH patients were interviewed on their experiences of ACP in NHs EOL issues were challenging to talk about although the family members appreciated staff raising these questions The patient s preferences were sometimes explicitly or implicitly communicated However in some cases family members had a feeling of the patient s preferences although they had not been clearly communicated Everyday details symbolised staff commitment The family members viewed the nurse as central The physician was described as absent and ACP meetings often went unnoticed Both involvement and lack of involvement could cause the family members feelings of guilt In conclusion we found that what constitutes a good death is highly individual although recurrent themes are seen EOL conversations are important and challenging and need staff training and experience It seems important to support healthcare staff not only to initiate ACP in NH patients but also to involve the patient and family members in the ACP and planning EOL care Making proactive plans regarding content of care including treatment limitations could enable patient autonomy optimise the chances for the patient to experience a good death and enhance for the family members during the dying trajectory and after the patient s death

Negotiating a Good Death Joan K Parry,Carlton Munson,2015-12-22 Social Work Theory and Practice with the Terminally Ill second edition takes a compassionate look at ways that social workers can help dying people and their families The social workers who work most effectively with terminally ill patients and their families are the ones who best understand the multifaceted nature of the dying process and its impact on the the patient the family and even on the health care professionals who work with patients at the end of life Dr Parry who specializes in dying and bereavement offers astute observations on the stages of dealing with the diagnosis of a terminal illness and the impending death that patients and their families confront This updated second edition provides valuable new information on ways that social workers can help those with AIDS and their families on traumatic death from any cause and on the grieving processes of parents Social Work Theory and Practice with the Terminally Ill second edition also includes stimulating discussions on the interdisciplinary health team the grieving process professional burnout how social workers adapt to working with dying patients euthanasia and physician assisted dying living wills and patients rights In touching case studies this volume illustrates the particular needs and concerns of the terminally ill and their families impending losses financial worries job concerns pain unfinished business and spiritual needs and reviews successful interventions used by social workers to help patients and their families work through the dying process

Negotiating a Good Death Carlton Muson,Joan K Perry,2014-05-01 Should human beings be allowed to decide when to die Should doctors be allowed to assist them During the last ten years there has been much international interest in euthanasia in the Netherlands In the discussion of euthanasia in the US and the UK both sides in the debate continually refer to the Dutch Experience Negotiating a Good Death Euthanasia in the Netherlands presents firsthand descriptions of euthanasia in practice in the Netherlands something that has never been done before This will provide a deeper understanding of the issues involved for all those interested in end of life decisions It will also help clinicians and other medical professionals better understand end of life decision making Negotiating a Good Death is the first inside account of how decisions about euthanasia are made in real life situations Documenting two years of observations at a Dutch hospital this valuable book describes why patients request euthanasia the social factors that influence doctors decisions about granting patients requests and how patients and doctors confer over peaceful deaths Some aspects of this delicate often hidden and socially taboo subject that Negotiating a Good Death frankly discusses are the emotions that lead to a wish for death the ideology of easy death the anthropology of death the role of the researcher the line between symptom alleviation and euthanasia where the responsibility lies conservative options for medical personnel how to speak to relatives of someone who has requested euthanasia euthanasia as a cultural construct Through case studies and examples Negotiating a Good Death Euthanasia in the Netherlands will help you understand the issues surrounding euthanasia and how life ending decisions are made by both doctors and patients
