Capital Karl Marx, 2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher Not indexed Not illustrated 1921 edition Excerpt To what extent some economists are misled by the Fetishism inherent in commodities or by the objective appearance of the social characteristics of labour is shown amongst other ways by the dull and tedious quarrel over the part played by Nature in the formation of exchange value Since exchange value is a definite social manner of expressing the amount of labour bestowed upon an object Nature has no more to do with it than it has in fixing the course of exchange The mode of production in which the product takes the form of a commodity or is produced directly for exchange is the most general and most embryonic form of bourgeois production It therefore makes its appearance at an early date in history though not in the same predominating and characteristic manner as now a days Hence its Fetish character is comparatively easy to be seen through But when we come to more concrete forms even this appearance of simplicity vanishes Whence arose the illusions of the monetary system To it gold and silver which serving as money did not represent a social relation between producers but were natural objects with strange social properties And modern economy which looks down with such disdain on the monetary system does not its superstition come out as clear as noon day whenever it treats of capital How long is it since economy I discarded the phisioeratic illusion that rents grow out of the soil and not out of society J that even Greeks and Romans had some process of production consequently an economy which just aft much constituted the material basis of their world at bourgeois economy constitutes that of our modern world Or perhaps Bastiat means that a mode of production based on slavery is based on a system of Karl Marx, Frederick Engels Karl Marx, 1975
