Crown of Midnight Sarah J. Maas, 2020-10-01 Never trust an assassin The second book in the 1 New York Times bestselling Throne of Glass series returns readers to a land destroyed by liars where one woman's truth is the only thing that saves them all

A Midsummer-night's dream, ed. by E.K. Chambers William Shakespeare, 1897 18 NIGHTS Nitin B. Itankar, 2025-05-16 18 Nights The Women of Kurukshetra The untold epic The unheard voices The Moon remembers Hastinapur unconquered ancient crowned in pride did not fall to armies but to a game of dice The greatest of warriors forged in years of fire and dharma collapsed like a mound of ivory cubes blown apart by the raging winds of vows silences and curses Men ruled the day They claimed their glory beneath the sun on blood soaked fields with roaring conches and chariots that split the earth But the nights The nights belonged to those whose voices were drowned by war cries To those who watched waited wept and endured 18 Nights The Women of Kurukshetra is a novel of those nights Set during the eighteen day war of the Mahabharata this is not a retelling of battles but a resurrection of memory Each night as dusk settles over Kurukshetra and the flames of battle give way to silence one woman speaks Some are queens others widows Some are goddesses in disguise A few are ghosts All are witnesses to a war that changed the world but not its telling Their voices rise not in chorus but in solitary aching monologue And the only one who listens who truly listens is the Moon The Moon the Ancient silver blooded unblinking drifts above the battlefield He watches without judgment He does not choose sides He remembers Across shattered flags and broken dreams he hovers like a thread binding the nights together He speaks only in preludes quiet reflections before each woman claims the dark with her truth These are not retellings they are revelations A mother speaks of the son she bore in secret and lost to war A forest queen speaks of a prince who never returned A cursed soul reborn in another body speaks of vengeance older than death A princess who raised a warrior mourns not the hero he became but the child she once held And one woman humiliated unbroken divine speaks twice her fire too fierce for one night alone Some voices whisper like ashes Others thunder like storm winds Some forgive Some curse gods Some ask no more than to be remembered Together their words form a parallel epic not of conquest but of consequence 18 Nights unfolds in chapters that balance lyricism with raw emotional truth Each chapter is a portrait of grief rage love hope or prophecy painted in the twilight Together they explore themes both eternal and intimate Silence and Speech How history is shaped not just by those who act but by those who are denied the right to speak Womb and War The battlefield may end by sunset but for many it begins again at moonrise in memory in loss in the child unborn Love and Betrayal Loyalty twisted by politics vows that bind tighter than blood and affections that defy fate Myth and Memory This is not revision It is what was left unsaid At its heart 18 Nights asks What happens to a story when those who were silenced are finally allowed to speak And the answer is not contradiction it is completion The Moon does not speak of right and wrong He does not raise flags But he sees what the day cannot And under his watchful gaze the women of Kurukshetra rise not to fight but to reclaim the night This novel is for readers who crave the mythic and the human the divine and the broken For those who wonder what history would sound like if it listened not just to kings but to queens mothers sisters and the shadows behind the throne This is not mythology This is memory long buried And now at last spoken aloud
