Corporate Crisis Recovery Petter Gottschalk, Christopher Hamerton, 2024-06-14 The principal aim of Corporate Crisis Recovery: Managing Organizational Deviance, Reputation and Risk is to complement and expand criminological discourse on the concept of the social license to operate as a means of influencing the behaviour of corporations. In recent years the wide spanning consequences of some very public globalized corporate crises including fiscal and environmental impact, staff retention and organizational survival have led to a growing body of research on crisis perception and responsive strategic management. Developments that position corporate crisis recovery as an anticipated requirement of visible compliance to normalized and anticipated standards of ethical practice and business conduct. Utilizing convenience theory to illustrate how corporations and the individuals therein are able to lose, repair and recover the corporate license to operate after corruption and scandal, the book develops to evaluate the responses of the public and criminal justice process to serious reputational damage and substantial breach of trust.

Recovery from Brain Damage Stanley Finger, 2013-03-08 It has long been recognized that damage to the mammalian central nervous system may be followed by behavioral recovery, but only recently has close attention been directed to specific factors which may enhance or retard restitution. This is evident in the rapidly growing number of journal articles and scientific paper sessions dealing with recovery of function as well as in the publicity given by the popular press to some of the findings in this field. The present text seeks to examine the foundations of brain lesion research, to review recent material on a number of factors which appear to contribute to recovery after brain damage and to present models which have been proposed to account for these effects. In order to best accomplish these goals a number of key workers in these areas were asked to examine and describe research literatures dealing with specific problems or methodological manipulations associated with brain damage and behavior using their own experiments and those of others to illustrate important points. In addition significant interpretive and theoretical issues were to be evaluated in each chapter.
