The electricity is generated by a power plant, which converts fuel into electricity. The power plant is connected to a power grid, which distributes the electricity to homes and businesses. The power grid is made up of power lines and substations. The power lines carry the electricity from the power plant to the substations, which then distribute the electricity to homes and businesses. The substations are connected to a network of power lines, which allows the electricity to be distributed to different parts of the country. The power grid is a complex system, and it is important to maintain it properly to ensure that electricity is available to everyone.
