Early Oregon Documents:

Some Bibliographical Revisions*

GEORGE N. BELKNAP

During the period through 1870, it was a frequent practice of Oregon public printers to issue official documents bound together in more or less logical combinations. Such combinations ranged from the journals of the two houses of the Legislative Assembly or the general and special session laws of the assembly to such arbitrary combinations as the journals of one of the houses with reports of decisions of the Supreme Court. The practice was gradually abandoned as the individual documents grew to substantial size with the growth of the state and its public business.

The printers were anything but consistent in their arrangement of such volumes. Sometimes the several parts are paged consecutively, sometimes each has its own separate pagination. Sometimes the combined volume has a common title page; more frequently each part has its own title page, in which case the cover title may indicate the total content of the volume; or the cover title may be identical with the title page of the first document in the volume. In some cases, the several documents, each with its own title page, are bound

*This bibliographical revision would not have been possible without the assistance of librarians in all parts of the United States. Space does not allow mention of all of those who have helped. I must, however, express my gratitude to the following persons who have kindly provided full and expert information in reply to repeated inquiries: Charles W. Smith, librarian emeritus, University of Washington Library; John Ross Tompkins, head of public services, Bancroft Library, University of California; Archibald Hanna, Director, Western American Collection, Yale University Library; Bessie H. Wilcox, librarian, Wisconsin State Historical Society; Dorcas A. Dooley, librarian, Massachusetts State Library; Hazel E. Mills, reference assistant, Oregon State Library; Frederick R. Goff, head, Rare Books Division, Library of Congress; T. E. Randolph, Jr., reference librarian, University of Illinois Library; Myrtle A. Moody, Acquisitions Department, Harvard Law School Library.
