

Origin of the Earth

The Earth probably formed from material in the solar nebula—the cloud of gas and dust that led to the formation of the Sun. This material gradually grew into a larger and larger body that became a red-hot ball of rock and metal. Later the rocky crust formed, its surface cooling enough to allow the continents to appear. Even later the oceans arrived, as well as the tiny organisms that released oxygen into the atmosphere. Although much of this gas was initially consumed in chemical reactions, over time, it allowed the development of multicellular organisms and an explosion of life that took place at the start of the Paleozoic Era, 542 million years ago.

Continental Drift

Over time the continents, which are part of tectonic plates that drift across the Earth's surface at the rate of a fingernail's growth, 100 million years ago, broke into tectonic plates and tectonic plates part of the world. Tectonic plates move apart and together, collide and create new tectonic plates. When the plates separate, a rift forms. In other words, they can break into smaller pieces and move in different directions. This is why the continents have moved apart, creating a rift between the continents.
