

Pint-sized geologist searches for signs of life on Mars

Mars Pathfinder, due to land on July 4, carries a small rover designed to move up to Martian rocks and analyse their chemical composition. From the data it sends to Earth, scientists may be able to confirm the presence of ancient water – the necessary ingredient for life. Pathfinder will land at a giant channel where floods may have deposited rocks from ancient highlands. The rocks are thought to be the same age as the 4.5 billion-year-old Mars meteorite (below right) which sparked the Life-on-Mars debate last August with supposed evidence of ancient microscopic life.
