

The Earth's crust

is the outermost layer of the Earth, which includes the continents and ocean floors. Due to the movement of tectonic plates, the Earth's crust is constantly changing. Even though these slow processes take many years, without us even realising, the crust undergoes constant distortions and fractures which it then regenerates with new rocks that come from inside the planet.

CORTEX DISTORTIONS

1 Folds: the materials that make up the crust are flexible. Therefore, tectonic forces take them creating mountains and depressions of the surface.

2 Ridges: when the plates move apart, a gap left behind is filled by the magma that rises from the within the Earth. When it hardens a new territory is created called a ridge. Most of the time this occurs around the oceans.

CRACKS are small fractures which do not cause rock shifting.

MORE ROCKS

When the magma expelled by volcanoes cools off, new rocks are created on the crust.

HORIZONTAL OR VERTICAL. The result of a fracture in the crust are two blocks that move in opposite directions.

FAULT LINES

When the forces in the Earth's crust are too strong, instead of causing distortions, cracks or even fractures are created, these are called fault lines. These processes usually take many years, but they can also occur suddenly and strongly causing earthquakes.

5-70 km is the minimum and maximum thickness of the crust.

EROSION

The behavior of so-called external factors, such as water, wind, humans, etc., contribute to the modification and wear down of the Earth's crust. This is known as erosion.
