

Origin of the Earth

The Earth probably formed from material in the solar nebula—the cloud of gas and dust that led to the formation of the Sun. This material gradually grew into a larger and larger body that became a red-hot ball of rock and metal. Later the rocky crust formed, its surface cooling enough to allow the continents to appear. Even later the oceans arrived, as well as the tiny organisms that released oxygen into the atmosphere. Although much of this gas was initially consumed in chemical reactions, over time, it allowed the development of multicellular organisms and an explosion of life that took place at the start of the Paleozoic Era, 542 million years ago.

Continental Drift

Over time the continents, which are part of tectonic plates that drift across the Earth's surface at the rate of a fingernail's growth, 3/16 of an inch per year, have shifted. Africa, Australia, and Antarctica were part of the supercontinent Gondwana. When tectonic plates are pushed together, they can push together and submerge one under the other. When the plates separate, a rift forms. The rift eventually fills with water through the ocean as the water level that remains above the rift becomes lower than the surrounding ocean. When plates slide past one another, a transform fault can form. When plates slide toward one another, a convergent plate boundary can form. When they slide away from one another, a divergent plate boundary can form. The plates are moving at the rate of 1 to 2 inches per year.

1 450 MILLION YEARS AGO
The supercontinent Gondwana formed as continents merged together.

2 350 MILLION YEARS AGO
The plates are moving apart. Pangaea, the supercontinent, is forming in the northern hemisphere.

3 250 MILLION YEARS AGO
Continents split, forming Africa and South America in the southern hemisphere and North America.

Origin of the Earth

The Earth was formed 4.5 billion years ago from a cloud of dust and gas. In the beginning, it was a molten, glowing sphere. As it cooled, the crust began to form, and the atmosphere began to form. The first life appeared 3.8 billion years ago.
