

EARTH'S SPHERES

Reading Comprehension

INTERACTIONS BETWEEN EARTH'S SPHERES

(13) The four spheres of Earth are not isolated entities; they continuously interact and influence each other, driving some of the processes that make Earth a habitable planet.

HYDROSPHERE

(17) The hydrosphere, derived from the Greek word "hydro" meaning water, encompasses all forms of water found on Earth. This includes oceans, seas, rivers, lakes, glaciers, ice caps, groundwater, and even water vapor in the atmosphere.

EARTH'S SPHERES
Reading Comprehension

(18) Earth is a dynamic planet, home to a variety of interconnected systems that sustain life and shape our environment. These systems are composed of both abiotic (non-living) and biotic (living) components, interacting within four fundamental spheres: Earth's spheres are the distinct layers of the planet, including the atmosphere, hydrosphere, geosphere, and biosphere. Each sphere plays a unique role in supporting various processes essential for life and environmental balance. Understanding these spheres and their interactions is important for comprehending the intricate behavior of Earth's ecosystems and the underlying processes that shape our planet.

ABIOTIC AND BIOTIC FACTORS

(19) An ecosystem is a community of living organisms and their interactions within a physical environment in a particular area of the planet. Ecosystems can be categorized into abiotic and biotic factors. Abiotic factors refer to non-living physical aspects of the environment. These include sunlight, water, soil composition, air temperature, and gravity. Biotic factors are related to living organisms within an ecosystem. Temperature, precipitation, and wind influence plant growth, which in turn affects the availability of food and habitat for other organisms.

(20) On the other hand, biotic factors encompass all living organisms and their interactions within an ecosystem. This group includes plants, animals, fungi, bacteria, and other microorganisms. These factors play a significant role in maintaining the balance of ecosystems. For example, plants (biotic) can absorb sunlight (abiotic) and provide food and habitat for other organisms. The interplay between abiotic and biotic factors is essential for the stability and sustainability of ecosystems, highlighting the interconnected nature of life on Earth.

EARTH'S FOUR SPHERES

(21) Our planet can be divided into four distinct spheres, each representing a different component of the Earth system. These spheres are the atmosphere, hydrosphere, geosphere, and biosphere, and they all interact and influence each other.

BIOSPHERE

(22) The biosphere is the part of Earth where life exists. It encompasses all living organisms and their interactions with the other spheres.
